City Views in the Habsburg and Medici Courts

Depictions of Rhetoric and Rule in the Sixteenth Century

By

Ryan E. Gregg

BRILL
LEIDEN | BOSTON
Contents

Acknowledgements vii
Illustrations ix

Introduction 1

1 Witnessing Sovereignty: Anton van den Wyngaerde’s City Views as Habsburg Courtly Propaganda 35
   1 The Archival Material: Their Evidentiary Problems and Indications 40
   2 Eyewitness to History: The Habsburg Use of City Views 44
   3 Genoa: City View as History and as Impresa 53
   4 Cantecroy, Mechelen, and the English Palaces: Claims of Dominion 77
   5 Brussels and Utrecht: Demonstrations of Sovereignty 86
   6 The Italian Views: Van den Wyngaerde in the Imperial Train 94
   7 Ancona and Lyon 120
   8 Conclusion 124

2 The Antwerp School of City Views 128
   1 Fertile Foundations 129
   2 The Catalyst: Charles v’s Entry into Rome 138
   3 Technique, Style, and Viewing Experiences 145
   4 Coalition 156
   5 Contemporary Recognition 181
   6 Conclusion 189

3 Vasari, Historiography, and the Rhetoric of City Views 190
   1 History, Truthfulness, and Setting 192
   2 The Tropes of Enargeia: Sieges, Ships, and City Views 198
   3 Viewing City Towers: Vision, Cognition, and Simulacra 211
   4 Nature or Artifice? The Mannerism of Antwerp School City Views 213
   5 City Views as Analogy for Judgment 223
   6 Enargeia and Eyewitnessing in Vasari’s Historiographic Practice 236
   7 Vasari’s Description of City View Methodology: a Verbal Artist Figure 252
   8 Borghini’s New Historiography and the City Views 259
   9 Conclusion 264
4 Defining Ducal Dominion: Giovanni Stradano's City Views in the Apartment of Leo X 266
1 The Room of Giovanni delle Bande Nere 267
2 The Room of Clement VII 285
3 The Room of Cosimo I 321
4 Conclusion 358

Coda: Heirs to Dominion 362
1 Heirs to Patronage 365

Bibliography 369
Index 407