Acknowledgments

Introduction

Before the Bible; Understanding Text in Light of the Dead Sea Scrolls

Textual Pluriformity

The Liturgical Body and the Ubiquity of Prayer

Redefining the Liturgical

Embodiment and the Liturgical Body

The Formation of Scriptures and Discerning Revelation

From Literary Text to Scripture

Outline of the Book

Shaping the Scribal Self Through Prayer and Paideia: The Example of Ben Sira

Prayer and the Formation of the Scribe

What Does Prayer Do?

The Self Through Neurological Lenses

Decentering the Self of the Scribe

The Self as a Cultural Achievement

The Indigenous Psychology of Ben Sira

Humanity and the Impulse to Worship

The Importance of Characterizing God in Self-Formation

The Communal Context for Self-Formation: Honor and Shame

The Cognitive Reward of Praise and Honor

Self-Discipline and the Embodied Sage

Becoming Sirach: Understanding the Fluid Manuscripts

Oral Teaching and Written Words

The Shifting Shape of Wisdom Discourse

The Living Voice of the Teacher and Emulating the Sages

The Ongoing Cycle of Prayer and Pedagogy

Interpreting and Extending Scripture

Conclusion

Confessing in Exile: The Reception and Composition of Jeremiah in (Daniel) and Baruch

Daniel and Baruch Within the Contours and Practice of Confessional Prayer

Daniel, Jeremiah, and the Angelic Oracle

Confessing with Baruch in Babylon and Jerusalem

Contextualizing the Narrative Introduction of Baruch 1:1-14

The Distinctiveness of Baruch 1:15-3:8

Baruch's Prayer and the Reception of Jeremiah

Becoming Jeremiah: The Ritualization of Baruch and the Composition of Jeremiah

Conclusion

The Eucharistic Body of Paul and the Ritualization of 2 Corinthians

The Collection for Jerusalem and Group Cohesion

The Collection as Benefaction