Preface
Introduction
The task of a general theory
Other models
A general theory of second language learning
Features of a general theory
Conditions for second language learning
An overview
Knowing a language
Interlanguage
Variability
Variety of language
Knowing how to use a language
Duality of knowledge and skills
Communicative competence
The view from theory
Structures and functions
The approach from language testing
Testing structural knowledge
Testing integrated functions
Necessary or imposed order
Goals for learning Hebrew - an example
Measuring knowledge of a second language
The idea of general proficiency
Relating the models
Linguistic outcomes in a general theory
The psycholinguistic basis
The human learner
The argument from linguistic theory
The relevance of age
Ability and personality
Individual differences
Intelligence
Aptitude
Learning styles and strategies
Personality
Anxiety in second language learning
The linguistic basis
Contrastive analysis
Universals and contrastive analysis
Universals and second language learning
The social context
Social factors
The stylistic dimension
The acculturation model
Attitudes and motivation
Language learning motivation
The socio-educational model
Attitudes, motivation, and acculturation
Social basis of motivation
Opportunities for second language learning
Opportunities for learning
Informal and formal learning
Pidginization and creolization
Foreigner talk
Formal instruction
The nature and effect of input
The value of formal instruction
The approach from teaching
Testing the model
Testing a preference model
Defining the outcomes
Ability and personality
Anxiety
Attitudes and rationales
The effects of attitudes
Opportunities for learning
A causal model
The form of a general theory
Choosing a model
Beyond the preference model
Extension of the theory to language loss
Conclusion
Appendix
Case study: Hebrew in a Jewish school
The case study
The reliability and validity of self-assessment
Tables
Bibliography and citation index
Index
Table of Contents provided by Blackwell's Book Services and R.R. Bowker. Used with permission.