Introductions aims and issues p. 1
The aims p. 1
The literature p. 3
The issues p. 5
Consciousness and self-consciousness p. 5
Individuation and identity p. 18
The person and personal identity p. 26
The general development p. 30
The Seventeenth-Century Background
The ontological view of the self: Scholastic and Cartesian conceptions p. 35
Descartes and the Cartesians on the person and the soul p. 36
Descartes and the Cartesians on consciousness p. 43
The trinity, human personality, and self-consciousness: the debate between Sherlock and South p. 54
Essayistic alternatives: Pascal and La Rochefoucauld p. 60
Metaphysicla alternatives: conceptions of identity, morality, and the afterlife p. 61
Spinoza on individuation, identity, and consciousness p. 61
Combridge Platonism: Cudworth's account of consciousness p. 67
The subjectivist treatment of identity: Clauberg, Hobbes, and Boyle p. 72
Personality and moral responsibility: Hobbes and Pufendorf p. 76
The afterlife: the immortality of the soul and the resurrection of the body p. 81
Immortality p. 82
The resurrection of the body p. 85
Locke's Subjectivist Revolution
Locke on identity, consciousness, and self consciousness p. 97
Locke and his 'sources' p. 97
Locke and the subjectivist treatment of identity p. 102
Locke on man, soul, and person p. 106
Locke on consciousness p. 109
Locke on consciousness, self-consciousness, and intuition p. 118
Locke on personal identity: consciousness, memory, and self-concern p. 121
Personal identity: Consciousness and memory p. 121
Personal identity: self-concern and moral and legal responsibility p. 127
Original sin p. 131
Self concern and the afterlife p. 132
The resurrection of the body: Locke's controversy with Stillingfleet p. 134
Repentance and moral miracles p. 139
Thinking matter and personal identity. Locke and his followers: Collins, Voltaire, and Cuenz p. 144
Problems With Locke: Critique and Defence
The notion of a person and the role of consciousness and memory p. 153
Person, man, soul, nd the resurrection of the body p. 156
Consciousness as the 'basis and foundation of all knowledge whatsoever': the Essay on Consciousness

Berkeleian themes

The person as 'the concrete of the will and understanding': Berkeley

Personal identity and original sin: Edwards

The senses of identity: Butler's epistemology and metaphysics of personal identity and the future life

'Pure thought' and identity: the anonymous Essay on Personal Identity, and Tucker's critique

Conclusion

Substance, Apperception, and Identity: Leibniz, Wolff, and Beyond

Individuation and identity, apperception and consciousness in Leibniz and Wolff

Leibniz on individuation and identity

Leibniz on personal identity

Problems with Leibniz: apperception and consciousness

Leibniz and Wolff

Wolff on consciousness, self-consciousness, and apperception

Wolff on consciousness, personal identity, and immortality

Beyond Leibniz and Wolff: from immortality to the necessary 'unity of the subject'

Wolffian accounts of immortality and identity

Leibnizian 'footprints' and identity: Canz, Poley, and von Creuz

Lockean leanings: Müller and Meier

Wolffian accounts of immortality and the four main theses of rational psychology

Wolffian accounts of consciousness, the unity of the soul, and personal identity

The necessary 'unity of the subject': Winckler, Knutzen, and Mendelssohn

From unity to identity: Eberhard and Reimarus

Consciousness and 'complete' identity: Tiedemann

From the critique of Wolffian apperception to the idea of the 'pre-existence' of self-consciousness

The primacy of consciousness: Rüdiger and Crusius contra Wolff and Klosse

On Wolffian self-consciousness: Hollmann and von Creuz

Self-consciousness and the body: Sulzer

Sulzer on consciousness and self-consciousness

Sulzer on self-consciousness and the body

Sulzer on the consciousness of the unity and identity of the self

Sulzer and Herder: self-consciousness and the distinction between representation ('Vorstellung') and feeling (Empfindung)

Towards Kant? Mérian on apperception and identity

Mérian on personal identity

Mérian on 'original apperception' as a necessary condition of thought

Beyond Mérian

Bundles and Selves: Hume in Contet