Contributors
Preface and acknowledgments
Introduction: the self-society dynamic
Exploring the relevance of social cognition for the relationship of self and society: linking the cognitive perspective and identity theory
Toward a sociology of cognition
The cerebral self: thinking and planning about identity-relevant activity
Growing up: the development and acquisition of social knowledge
The social contexts of self-feeling
Self-processes and emotional experiences
An affect control view of cognition and emotion
The self-concept as a basis for a theory of motivation
Attitudes, behavior, and the self
From changing selves toward changing society
Possible selves and social support: social cognitive resources for coping and striving
Is the road to helping paved with good intentions? Or inertia?
Social structure and the moral self
The production of selves in personal relationships
Conclusion
Indexes

Table of Contents provided by Blackwell's Book Services and R.R. Bowker. Used with permission.