Introduction: Citizenship and the Aleph

Models of Citizenship and Hermeneutics

Introduction
Citizenship as universality and as a legal construction
Citizenship as neutrality
Citizenship as communality and participation
Citizenship as amelioration of class conflicts
Citizenship as self-sufficiency
Citizenship as a hermeneutic endeavor

Citizenship, Irony, Adriftness: Richard Rorty's Hermeneutics

Introduction
Pragmatism and historicity
Contingency and politics
Metaphysical "foundations" and historical ones: A critique of Rorty's conception of history
Conversation and Rorty's ideal citizen
Ironic and pluralism
Ironic, solidarity, or why reading books is not enough

Conclusion
Citizenship and Gadamer's Hermeneutics
Understanding, interpretation, language
Citizenship and dialogue
Historicity and universality
Phronesis, techne, solidarity: Gadamer's analysis of the modern polis
Hermeneutics and the limits of conversation
Toward a Hermeneutic-Historical Consciousness
Hermeneutics and memory
A hermeneutic-historical consciousness
Hermeneutics and a minimalist conception of the good
Replies and answers
Hermeneutics and the Limits of Difference
Difference and the critique of universality
The confusion of the West
The differend: Victims and the fate of phrases
The Impossible Consensus
Negotiations, ruses and the odd couple: Kantianism and paganism
Justice or the triumph of paganism
The limits of difference

The Quest for Community and the Quest for Glory: John Dewey's and Hannah Arendt's Visions of the Public Sphere
The public: Democracy as community life