Introduction: Merrill-Palmer Quarterly at age 50, an occasion for appraising the past, present, and future of the human developmental sciences

The origins and evolution of Merrill-Palmer Quarterly: a historical overview

Celebrating the 50th anniversary of Merrill-Palmer Quarterly

Essays in honor of the 50th anniversary of Merrill-Palmer Quarterly

The limitations of concepts in developmental psychology

Theory-of-mind development: retrospect and prospect

Cognitive development includes global and domain-specific processes

Learning about learning

Temperament and the pursuit of an integrated developmental psychology

Emotion-related regulation: an emerging construct

The role of mental representation in social development

Children's friendships: shifts over a half-century in perspectives on their development and their effects

Paying attention to and not neglecting social withdrawal and social isolation

The next 50 years: considering gender as a context for understanding young children's peer relationships

Understanding children's family worlds: family transitions and children's outcomes

Fathers, families, and the future: a plethora of plausible predictions

Progress and prospects in the psychology of moral development

Conscience in childhood: past, present, and future

Genetics and developmental psychology

The nature-nurture debate and public policy

Why we need to explore development in its cultural context

Historical lessons: the value of pluralism in psychological research

Early child care: the known and the unknown

Early learning and school readiness: can early intervention make a difference?

Contextual factors in risk and prevention research

Integrating developmental scholarship and society: from dissemination and accountability to evidence-based programming and policies

Table of Contents provided by Blackwell's Book Services and R.R. Bowker. Used with permission.