The Canadian short story: status, criticism, historical survey p. 1

Canadian animal stories: Charles G. D. Roberts, "Do seek their meat from God" p. 41

Tory humanism, ironic humor, and satire: Stephen Leacock, "The marine excursion of the knights of Pythias" p. 53

The beginnings of Canadian modernism: Raymond Knister, "The first day of spring" p. 67

From old world aestheticist immoralist to prairie moral realist: Frederick Philip Grove, "Snow" p. 83

Psychological realism, immigration, and city fiction: Morley Callaghan, "Last spring they came over" p. 95

Modernism, prairie fiction, and gender: Sinclair Ross, "The lamp at noon" p. 105

"An artful artlessness": Ethel Wilson, "We have to sit opposite" p. 117

Social realism and compassion for the underdog: Hugh Garner, "One-two-three little Indians" p. 129

The perils of human relationships: Joyce Marshall, "The old woman" p. 141

The social critic at work: Mordecai Richler, "Benny, the war in Europe, and Myerson's daughter Bella" p. 149

Myth and the postmodernist turn in Canadian short fiction: Sheila Watson, "Antigone" p. 163

The modernist aesthetic: Hugh Hood, "Flying a red kite" p. 175

Doing well in the international thing?: Mavis Gallant, "The ice wagon going down the street" p. 191

(un-)doing gender: Alice Munro, "Boys and girls" p. 203

Collective memory and personal identity in the prairie town of Manawaka: Margaret Laurence, "The loons" p. 219

"Out of place": Clark Blaise, "A class of new Canadians" p. 233

Realism and parodic postmodernism: Audrey Thomas, "Aquarius" p. 247

"The problem is to make the story": Rudy Wiebe, "Where is the voice coming from?" p. 261

The Canadian writer as expatriate: Norman Levine, "We all begin in a little magazine" p. 271

Canadian artist stories: John Metcalf, "The strange aberration of Mr. Ken Smythe" p. 283

"A literature of a whole world and of a real world": Jane Rule, "Lilian" p. 299

Failure as liberation: Jack Hodgins, "The concert stages of Europe" p. 313

"The translation of the world into words" and the female tradition: Margaret Atwood, "Significant moments in the life of my mother" p. 331

"Southern preacher": Leon Rooke, "The woman who talked to horses" p. 341

Nativeness as third space: Thomas King, "Borders" p. 353

Digressing to inner worlds: Carol Shields, "Our men and women" p. 365

A sentimental journey: Janice Kulyk Keefer, "Dreams: storms: dogs" p. 375

Time chart: the short story in the USA, Canada, and Great Britain

Table of Contents provided by Blackwell's Book Services and R.R. Bowker. Used with permission.