A Concise Companion to Modernism

Edited by David Bradshaw
Contents

Acknowledgments vii
Notes on Contributors viii
Chronology xi

Introduction

David Bradshaw 1

1 The Life Sciences: “Everybody nowadays talks about evolution”
   Angelique Richardson 6

2 Eugenics: “They should certainly be killed”
   David Bradshaw 34

3 Nietzscheanism: “The Superman and the all-too-human”
   Michael Bell 56

4 Anthropology: “The latest form of evening entertainment”
   Jeremy MacClancy 75

5 Bergsonism: “Time out of mind”
   Mary Ann Gillies 95

6 Psychoanalysis in Britain: “The rituals of destruction”
   Stephen Frosh 116
Contents

7 Language: “History is a nightmare from which I am trying to awake”
April McMahon 138

8 Technology: “Multiplied man”
Tim Armstrong 158

9 The Concept of the State 1880–1939: “The discredit of the State is a sign that it has done its work well”
Sarah Wilkinson 179

10 Physics: “A strange footprint”
Michael H. Whitworth 200

11 Modernist Publishing: “Nomads and mapmakers”
Peter D. McDonald 221

12 Reading: “‘Mind hungers’ common and uncommon”
Todd Avery and Patrick Brantlinger 243

Select Bibliography 262

Index 266