Nature and Space: Aalto and Le Corbusier

Sarah Menin and Flora Samuel
Contents

Illustration credits ix
Acknowledgements xi
Preface xiii

1 Introduction
Technology and art: a natural unity?
Nurturing nature
Growing environments in the ‘gap’
Designing to fill a ‘gap’
Potential space for creativity
Ecology of imagination
Natural holding space

11 The human side
Mother and the ‘good-enough’ environment
Forest and rock: education of matter
Conclusion

23 Natural growth, natural contract: from pattern to principle
A self-mastering nature
Educating Aalto
Purism, Paimio and the art of amorphism
Ancient Greek cosmology in an epoch of technology
Unity, uncertainty and the potentialities of natural form
Conclusion

53 The meeting of modern minds
Modernity moves north
Searching for a gentler Modernism
The personable personas of prophets
Conclusion
4 Radiant nature writing
63 Culturing cells
69 Atria and annunciation: extending boundaries of garden and room
73 Sun, passion and light
74 Mater, matter and materials
83 Conclusion

5 The mysticism of nature and the agony of life:
Cap Martin and Muuratsalo
85 All but manic zeal
89 War and the expedient nature of helplessness
91 Elemental meditation or modern mediation:
personal retreats as places of the soul
102 Conclusion

6 Spiritual space as a holding environment
103 Ineffably Ronchamp
111 Three in one: between inferiority and spirituality
120 Conclusion

7 World-building: nature, biology and luxuriant forms
123 Dwelling as a sacred space
133 Re-enacting settlement
141 Conclusion

8 Building natural attachment
143 Nature and standardisation
145 Community building?
149 Nature, housing and the search for nuance
158 World rebuilding: Interbau, Berlin 1957
159 Conclusion

Conclusion: nature relations and the heart of architecture
161 Growth and incessant creativity
162 From an ancient world-view to modern world-building
164 Mania, multivalency and the ecology of imagination
165 Realism and idealism: a growing sense of architecture
166 Sacred (in) security and life’s quarrelling sub-problems
167 Nature and Potential Space: the ‘gap’ and the power of creativity

169 Select Bibliography
177 Index