An Introductory History of British Broadcasting

Second edition

Andrew Crisell
Contents

Acknowledgements to the first edition xiii
Acknowledgements to the second edition xv
Preface to the second edition xvii
Introduction xix

Part I

THE PHENOMENON OF BROADCASTING 1
Sources/further reading 10

1 THE BIRTH OF RADIO 13
The development of radio technology 14
The establishment of a public broadcasting service 17
The first programmes 20
Radio listeners and wireless receivers 22
Between the fire and the fire-brigade 24
Sources/further reading 26

2 THE BBC: FROM PRIVATE COMPANY TO NATIONAL INSTITUTION 27
Regional, national, global 28
Growing pains 30
Developments in radio news 32
Contents

6 PILKINGTON AND AFTER 111
   Sir Hugh Greene: character and achievements 112
   Public service broadcasting in an age of competition 113
   The BBC’s case to Pilkington 115
   The Pilkington Report: immediate impact and long-term effects 116
   The birth and infancy of BBC 2 119
   Three programme landmarks of the 1960s 122
   Other developments in programmes and technology 126
   Educational television 129
   The ITV franchise awards, 1964 and 1967 130
   From swinging sixties to sombre seventies 131
   Sources/further reading 133

7 THE FALL AND RISE OF RADIO 135
   The BBC’s dwindling audience 136
   Technological developments in radio 137
   Radio, records and rock 140
   Pirates ahoy! 142
   The Beeb strikes back 144
   The launch of local radio 146
   Broadcasting in the Seventies 147
   Sources/further reading 149

8 MODERN TELEVISION (1): SOME CHARACTERISTICS AND TENDENCIES 151
   Open the box 152
   Words and pictures 153
   Words versus pictures 155
   Pictures rule OK! 158
   Television and theatre 161
   Television and genre 164
   Sources/further reading 169

9 MODERN TELEVISION (2): SOCIAL IMPACTS AND INFLUENCES 171
   From hatstand to arbiter 172
   Television and politics before 1959 175
   Television and politics since 1959 179
   Television and the royal family 183