Teaching and Researching Speaking

Rebecca Hughes
Contents

Acknowledgements

Introduction

Section I  Issues in teaching and researching speaking

1  Conceptual and historical background

   1.1  Introduction

   1.2  The skill of speaking

   1.3  The nature of speech in contrast to writing

   1.4  Where does speech fit in language studies?

   1.5  Summary

2  The research space: paradigms and problems

   2.1  Introduction

   2.2  Classical research paradigms in relation to researching speaking

   2.3  Attitudes to speech data

   2.4  The applicability of research approaches and frameworks to the study of speech

   2.5  The problem of the status of speech in applied linguistics

   2.6  Where are the data for research into speech?

   2.7  Summary
Section II  Issues for teaching and assessing speaking

3  Approaches, materials and the problem of 'real' speech
   3.1  Introduction
   3.2  Spoken interaction in context
   3.3  Teaching global speaking skills
   3.4  Teaching spoken grammar
   3.5  Perspectives on pronunciation and fluency
   3.6  Bringing the skills together
   3.7  Summary

4  Issues in assessing speaking
   4.1  Introduction
   4.2  Language proficiency versus speaking proficiency
   4.3  The issue of interactivity
   4.4  The issue of creating authentic conditions for speech testing
   4.5  The issue of spoken genres and testing
   4.6  Integrated versus discrete skills testing
   4.7  A comparison of test paradigms for oral assessment 4.8  The criteria for three tests of speaking compared
   4.9  Summary

5  Approaches to researching speech
   5.1  Introduction
   5.2  Research into global features of speech
   5.3  Grammar, structural choices and the spoken language
   5.4  Research into fluency and pronunciation
   5.5  Summary

6  Some new directions
   6.1  Introduction
   6.2  Mode-based research
   6.3  Theoretical orientations on the role and status of speech
   6.4  Evidence from speech pathology
   6.5  Modality, processing and memory
   6.6  Speaking, writing and teaching spoken/written forms of language
6.7 Summary of central issues discussed in relation to new approaches to speech 129
6.8 Summary 130

Section III  Researching speaking 131

7  Classrooms, research and spoken mode 133
7.1 Introduction 134
7.2 Implications of the nature of spoken discourse on teaching speech 134
7.3 Moving towards your own project on spoken discourse 136
7.4 Sources of inspiration for research 138

8  Research project ideas and frameworks 142
8.1 Introduction 142
8.2 Projects on oral interaction: a discourse analysis approach and an experimental approach 143
8.3 Projects on one particular spoken discourse feature: an action-research approach and a conversation analysis approach 149
8.4 Projects on oral task difficulty: two approaches to quantifying complexity 153
8.5 Projects on differences between mode: two experimental approaches 158

Section IV  Resources and further information 165

9  Research borders and boundaries 167
9.1 Introduction 167
9.2 Speaking and ethnographic or cross-cultural studies 168
9.3 Speaking and psycholinguistics 169
9.4 Speaking and neuro-linguistic studies 169
9.5 Speaking and corpus linguistics 169
9.6 Speaking and new technologies 170
CONTENTS

10 Research resources
10.1 Traditional library resources
10.2 Databases and sound archives (both on-line and on CD-ROM)
10.3 Speech corpora
10.4 Societies and organisations
10.5 Speech recognition and text-to-speech
10.6 On-line pronunciation and intonation resources
10.7 Research skills summaries
10.8 Other on-line resources

Glossary
References
Index