Martin Roberts (Ed.)

After the Wall
History Teaching in Europe since 1989
Contents

Preface
At the end of the Millennium: teaching and learning history in European schools since 1989 11
Martin Roberts

Setting the scene
Political and social change in Europe since 1989 14
Robert Stradling

I. History teaching, national identity and citizenship 25

History and national identity 28
Nicholas Tate

*Reflections on history, nationhood and schooling 39
Robert Phillips

History in schools and national identity in reunified Germany 49
Rolf Brütting

Teaching history and citizenship in France 56
Bernard Phan

*School history education for the development of democracy in Ukraine 62
Polina Verbytska
II. Addressing minorities' issues  69

Issues in the teaching of history of ethnic minorities in schools in Latvia  71
Jelena Ryazantseva and Jelena Smolina

*Minority issues in the teaching of history in Hungary  78
Judit Stefany

*The challenges facing multicultural education in Bulgaria  87
Rumyana Kusheva

III. Syllabus change: what knowledge and which skills?  95

Syllabus change: a Dutch perspective  99
Loek Janssens

*Syllabus change: an Albanian perspective  106
Adrian Papajani

*Syllabus change: a view from Portugal  109
Isabel Barca and Olga Marghalâes

*Balancing skills and knowledge – a Scottish perspective  114
Peter Hillis

*Balancing the acquisition of knowledge and the development of methodological skills – a Russian perspective  122
Olga Strelova

Towards competent historical knowledge: Notes on the national history curricula in Italy in the last thirty years  126
Ernesto Perillo and Bernardo Draghi
IV. Textbooks 137

*Developments in Polish history textbooks since 1989 140
Andrzej Chrzanowski

*History textbooks in Russia since 1989 147
Julia Kushnereva

*Textbooks and the teaching of twentieth century history in Serbia since 1989 152
Radina Vučetić-Mladenović

V. Information and Communication Technology in the teaching and learning of history 161

ICT in Swedish history teaching and learning 163
Hans Almgren

Scott Harrison

ICT and history teaching and learning in Italy 1989–2003 178
Giuseppe Di Tonto

VI. Assessment 187

Current reforms of the school-leaving examination in the Czech Republic 190
Marie Homerova

*The Graduation Examination in the context of major changes in teaching history in Estonia during the last decade 201
Mare Oja

Developments in assessment in Denmark 212
Pia Gars Jensen, Marianne Jerslev and Lotte Schou
VII. How pupils learn history outside school 219

*Out-of-school history: a Greek perspective 222
Vassiliki Sakka

*Learning to learn from the past: a view from English Heritage Education 228
Mike Corbishley

The legacy of parents and grandparents: How do young people in central and eastern Europe reflect on the communist past? 239
Eva-Clarita Onken

VIII. Centralised or decentralised control of the history curriculum 249

*State policy and the teaching of history in post-Soviet Russia: Coming full circle? 252
Vera Kaplan

Who controls the school history curriculum in Poland? 260
Maria Mazur

*History curricula reform and teacher autonomy in Slovenia 264
Jelka Razpotnik

IX. History in the school curriculum 275

*Teaching history in Iceland: The last ten years 278
Susanna M. Gestdottir

*A decade of new history education in Romania: Challenges, scandals, perspectives 286
Laura Capita, Doru Dumitrescu and Mihai Manea
Teaching history in Lithuania during the period 1988–2000  295
Benediktas Šetkus

The teaching of history in Spain in the decade of educational reforms  302
Cristina del Moral and Fernando Palanco

Appendix   311

The Council of Europe and history teaching  313
Alison Cardwell

The Council of Europe and the origins of EUROCLIO  319
Maitland Stobart

The origins of EUROCLIO – one perspective  322
Martin Roberts

Promoting the idea of a common European past and future: EUSTORY – a history network for young Europeans  326
Gabriele Woidelko

List of contributors  331

Editor’s note:
In the interest of length and readability, detailed footnotes and booklists have been omitted from this volume. An asterisk (*) beside the title of the article indicates that the unedited version of the article, complete with detailed footnotes and bibliography, is available from the author.