Contents

General Editor's Preface ix
Preface xi
Acknowledgments xiv

Part I Theoretical Grounds 1

1 The Objects, Objectives, and Objectivity of Textual Analysis 3
  • Kristeva in the English department 3
  • "Archivists, archaeologists, and necrophiliacs" 6
  • Formalist machines, New Critical puddings, and the "text" 8
  • From application to implication 15

2 The Subject, the Abject, and Psychoanalysis 19
  • From object to subject 19
  • The decentered subject and psychoanalysis 20
  • The subject, in the beginning 25
  • "Before the beginning" 30
  • "Neither subject nor object" 32
  • "Approaching abjection" 35
  • The sublime turn 37

Part II Reading Kristeva, Reading Literature 43

3 Céline's Pharmacy 45
  • Taking it the wrong way 45
  • Letter bombs: the rhythms of abjection 52
  • Tangles and cuts: narrating abjection in Céline's Journey to the End of the Night 66
• Strange fruit: the Rhetoric of Abjection in Tim O'Brien's "How to Tell a True War Story" 77
• Ad nauseam 85
4 Joyce's "Quashed Quotatoes" 90
• James Joyce/Julia Kristeva 90
• Intertextuality, intersubjectivity, and the death of the author 92
• The Menippean and a literary tradition of otherness 98
• Transposition and the portmanteau word 107
• New associations: music, the body, and the dissident 111
• "a wildgoup's chase" 116
• Identification, transubstantiation, and love 119
• What does it matter who's speaking? 132
5 Wordsworth's Tales of Love 135
• Poststructuralism's "other Wordsworth" 135
• The poet at the "end of the line" 138
• Kristeva and the pre-Oedipal Wordsworth 140
• Reading love in the "Blessed Babe" 144
• New Narcissi and a criticism to come 147

Glossary 150
Notes 167
Annotated Bibliography 183
Bibliography 202
Index 210