Consonant Change in English Worldwide
Synchrony meets Diachrony

Daniel Schreier
Contents

List of Tables ix
List of Figures xi
Acknowledgements xiii
List of Abbreviations xv

1 Introduction 1
  1.1 Phonotactic language change: an interdisciplinary approach 5
  1.2 Scope, outline and structure 12

2 Consonant Clusters: General Observations 16
  2.1 Consonant clusters and syllable structure 18
  2.2 Change and adaptation mechanisms 39
  2.3 Causes and motivations: a first approach 45
  2.4 Conclusion 54

3 Initial Cluster Reduction in English 56
  3.1 Historical loss of initial clusters in British English 58
  3.2 /hw-/ > /w-/ in post-colonial English, with special reference to New Zealand 82
  3.3 Initial cluster loss in language contact conditions 113
  3.4 Conclusion 122

4 Final Cluster Reduction in English 126
  4.1 A typology of consonant cluster reduction in English, revisited 129
  4.2 Four case studies: final CCR in New Zealand and South Atlantic English 137
  4.3 Final CCR in English around the world: a comparative analysis 158
  4.4 Word-final CCR in English: summary 196
viii Contents

5 Theoretical Implications 198
  5.1 Variation and differentiation 198
  5.2 Implications for language change 212
  5.3 A psycholinguistic explanation? 217

6 Summary and Conclusion 221

Notes 226
References 230
Index 244