Contents

Introduction: Reexamining the Place of Grammar in Writing Instruction
Ray Wallace (Northwestern State University of Louisiana) 1

I: Past Attitudes Toward Grammar Instruction 7

1 When Grammar Was a Language Art
Cheryl Glenn (Oregon State University) 9

2 A Question of Power: Why Frederick Douglass Stole Grammar
Jon Olson (Oregon State University) 30

3 Reasserting Grammar's Position in the Trivium in American College Composition
Gina Claywell (Eastern State University, Oklahoma) 43

4 "Grammatical Monstrosities" and "Contemptible Miscreants": Sacrificial Violence in the Late Nineteenth-Century Usage Handbook
Richard Boyd (University of California, Riverside) 54

5 The 1945 NCTE Commission on the English Curriculum and Teaching the Grammar/Writing Connection
Garry Ross (Northwestern State University of Louisiana) 71

II: Present Concerns About Grammar and Writing 87

6 The Rainbow and the Stream: Grammar as System Versus Language in Use
John R. Edlund (California State University, Los Angeles) 89

7 The Use of Grammar Texts: A Call for Pedagogical Inquiry
Joan Mullin (University of Toledo) 103

8 Grammar for Writers: How Much is Enough?
R. Baird Shuman (University of Illinois, Urbana) 114

9 Grammar in the Writing Center: Opportunities for Discovery and Change
Carl W. Glover and Byron L. Stay (Mount St. Mary's College) 129
10  Rhetorical Contexts of Grammar: Some Views from Writing-Emphasis Course Instructors
    Donald Bushman and Elizabeth Ervin
    (University of North Carolina at Wilmington)  136

11  Grammar and Voice in the Teaching of Creative Writing: A Conversation
    Stuart C. Brown, Robert Boswell, and Kevin McIlvoy
    (New Mexico State University)  159

12  Teaching Grammar for Writers in a Process Workshop Classroom
    Wendy Bishop (Florida State University)  176

III : Future Places of Grammar in Writing Instruction  189

13  Reconceptualizing Grammar as an Aspect of Rhetorical Invention
    David Blakesley (Southern Illinois University)  191

14  Teaching Grammar Affectively: Learning to Like Grammar
    Irene Brosnahan and Janice Neuleib (Illinois State University)  204

15  Taking Computer-Assisted Grammar Instruction to New Frontiers
    Eric H. Hobson (St. Louis College of Pharmacy)  213

16  Correctness or Clarity? Finding Answers in the Classroom and the Professional World
    Neil Daniel and Christina Murphy (Texas Christian University)  225

       Afterword: Repositioning Grammar in Writing Classes of the Future
       Susan Hunter (Kennesaw State College)  243

Works Cited  247

Contributors  261