Contents

Introduction: Marketing Modernisms
Kevin J. H. Dettmar and Stephen Watt

PART ONE: Modernist Self-Promotion

Make It Sell! Ezra Pound Advertises Modernism
Timothy Materer

“I Can Have More Than Enough Power to Satisfy Me”: T. S. Eliot’s Construction of His Audience
Leonard Diepeveen

“One Hundred Per Cent Bohemia”: Pop Decadence and the Aestheticization of Commodity in the Rise of the Slicks
Michael Murphy

Selling Sex as Art
Joyce Wexler

Coterie Consumption: Bloomsbury, Keynes, and Modernism as Marketing
Jennifer Wicke

Joyce’s Face
Maurizia Boscagli and Enda Duffy

A Taste of Fortune: In the Money and Williams’s New Directions Phase
Daniel Morris

PART TWO: Voices at the Margins/Rereadings

Advertising Feminism: Ornamental Bodies/Docile Bodies and the Discourse of Suffrage
Barbara Green
Selling Taboo Subjects: The Literary Commerce of Gertrude Stein and Carl Van Vechten
  Corrine E. Blackmer 221

The Art of Self-Promotion; or, Which Self to Sell?
The Proliferation and Disintegration of the Harlem Renaissance
  Christopher M. Mott 253

Making Poetry Pay: The Commodification of Langston Hughes
  Karen Jackson Ford 275

Marketing Modern Poetry and the Southern Public Sphere
  Walter Kalaidjian 297

The Fate of Gender in Modern American Poetry
  Cary Nelson 321

Contributors 361

Index 365