Staging the Rage
The Web of Misogyny in Modern Drama

Edited by Katherine H. Burkman and Judith Roof
Contents

Acknowledgments
Katherine H. Burkman and Judith Roof, “Introduction” 11

Part I: Pinter, et al. Stage the Rage

1. Katherine H. Burkman, The Web of Misogyny in Mamet’s and Pinter’s Betrayal Games 27
2. Judith Roof, Takes a Licking and Keeps on Ticking: Paranoia and Misogyny in Modern Drama 38
3. Beth McCoy, A Nation’s Meta-language: Misogyny in Amiri Baraka’s Dutchman and The Slave 54
4. Stephen Watt, Postmodern “Impurity,” and Pinter’s Political Turn 76

Part II: The Hedda Complex: The Paradox of Self-assertion through Self-destruction

5. Jeanne Colleran, Refusing to Re-cover: Adrienne Kennedy’s The Ohio State Murders 95
6. Timothy Wiles, Suicide and Self-Annihilation: Marsha Norman’s night, Mother and Karen Finley’s The Constant State of Desire 112
7. Amanda Dine-Gamble and Judith Roof, In Enemy Territory: Women, Power, Misogyny and Hare’s Plenty 124

Part III: Female Autonomy

8. Robert Gordon, Rewriting the Sex War in The Father, Miss Julie, and Creditors: Strindberg, Authorship, and Authority 139
9. Anne Marie Drew, Embracing Ambiguity: Shaw’s Women 158
10. Ann C. Hall, “Gawd, you’d think I was a piece of furniture”: O’Neill’s Anna Christie 171
CONTENTS

Part IV: Sexual Masquerades: Brecht, Hwang, and Wilde

11. Elizabeth Wright, The Good Person of Szechwan: Discourse of a Masquerade 185
12. Paula Jayne White, What Passes for a Woman in Modern China 196
15. Frank Smigiel, The Queen is Dead: Style, Salomé, and the Death of the Woman 248

Notes on Contributors 267
Index 269