Contents

General editor’s preface vii
Contributors ix
Acknowledgements xi

1 Introduction: Shakespeare and the post-colonial question 1
    Ania Loomba and Martin Orkin

Part 1

2 ‘This Tunis, sir, was Carthage’: Contesting colonialism in The Tempest 23
    Jerry Brotton

3 ‘A most wily bird’: Leo Africanus, Othello and the trafficking in difference 43
    Jonathan Burton

4 ‘These bastard signs of fair’: Literary whiteness in Shakespeare’s sonnets 64
    Kim F. Hall

5 ‘Tis not the fashion to confess’: ‘Shakespeare–Post-coloniality–Johannesburg, 1996’ 84
    Margo Hendricks

6 Nation and place in Shakespeare: The case of Jerusalem as a national desire in early modern English drama 98
    Avraham Oz
vi Contents

7 Bryn Glas
   Terence Hawkes

Part 2

8 'Local-manufacture made-in-India Othello fellows':
   Issues of race, hybridity and location in post-colonial Shakespeares
   Ania Loomba

9 Post-colonial Shakespeare? Writing away from the centre
   Michael Neill

10 Possessing the book and peopling the text
   Martin Orkin

11 Shakespeare and Hanekom, King Lear and land:
   A South African perspective
   Nicholas Visser

12 From the colonial to the post-colonial: Shakespeare and education in Africa
   David Johnson

13 Shakespeare, psychoanalysis and the colonial encounter: The case of Wulf Sachs's Black Hamlet
   Andreas Bertoldi

14 Shakespeare and theory
   Jonathan Dollimore

References 277
Index 299