Contents

General Editor's Note ix
Publisher's Note xi
Introduction:
Salman Rushdie: The Development of a Literary Reputation 1
M. Keith Booker

"Marching In from the Peripheries":
Rushdie's Feminized Artistry and Ambivalent Feminism 16
Ambreen Hai

Reading the Rushdie Affair: "Islam," Cultural Politics, Form 51
Aamir R. Mufti

Rushdies's Dastan-e-Dilruba:
The Satanic Verses as Rushdie's Love Letter to Islam 78
Feroza Jussawalla

The Cultural Politics of Rushdie Criticism: All or Nothing 107
Timothy Brennan

An Invitation to Indian Postmodernity:
Rushdie's English Vernacular as Situated Cultural Hybridity 129
Bishnupriya Ghosh

The Moor's Last Sigh and India's National Bourgeoisie:
Reading Rushdie through Frantz Fanon 154
Farhad B. Idris

"The Mirror of Us All": Midnight's Children and the Twentieth-Century Bildungsroman 169
Dubravka Juraga
CONTENTS

“This Angrezi in which I am forced to write”:
On the Language of Midnight’s Children
   Michael Gorra 188

Allegorizing the Emergency: Rushdie’s Midnight’s Children and Benjamin’s Theory of Allegory
   Todd M. Kuchta 205

Rewriting History and Identity: The Reinvention of Myth, Epic, and Allegory in Salman Rushdie’s
Midnight’s Children
   Michael Reder 225

Victim into Protagonist? Midnight’s Children and the Post-Rushdie National Narratives of the Eighties
   Josna E. Rege 250

Midnight’s Children, History, and Complexity:
   Reading Rushdie after the Cold War
   M. Keith Booker 283

Notes on Contributors 315
Index 317