Anthropology and Colonialism in Asia and Oceania

Jan van Bremen and Akitoshi Shimizu
Contents

Notes on contributors vii
Acknowledgements xi

Introduction
Anthropology in colonial contexts: a tale of two countries and some
Jan van Bremen and Akitoshi Shimizu 1

Part One: Anthropology in colonial contexts: historical and comparative perspectives

1 Anthropology in colonial contexts. The second Kamchatka expedition (1733–1743) and the Danish–German Arabia expedition (1761–1767)
Han F. Vermeulen 13

2 Academic traditions, urban dynamics and colonial threat: the rise of ethnography in early modern Japan
Margarita Winkel 40

3 From texts to bodies: Brian Houghton Hodgson and the emergence of ethnology in India
Peter Pels 65

4 Nationalist anthropology in Taiwan 1945–1996 – a reflexive survey
Fred Y.L. Chiu 93
CONTENTS

Part Two: Japanese anthropology in colonial contexts: East Asia, South-East Asia and Oceania

5 Colonialism and the development of modern anthropology in Japan
   Akitoshi Shimizu
   115

6 Assimilation from within, appropriation from without: the folklore-studies and ethnology of Ryūkyū/Okinawa
   Patrick Beillevaire
   172

7 Japanese colonialism and the investigation of Taiwanese 'old customs'
   Timothy Y. Tsu
   197

8 The natives next-door: ethnology in colonial Korea
   Boudewijn Walraven
   219

9 Japanese colonial policy and anthropology in Manchuria
   Katsumi Nakao
   245

10 Staging ethnography: theatre and Japanese colonialism
   Jennifer Robertson
   266

11 Toilet training, shame, and the influence of alien cultures: cultural anthropologists and American policy making for postwar Japan 1944–1945
   Rudolf V.A. Janssens
   285

Part Three: Dutch anthropology in colonial contexts: South-East Asia

12 Colonial ideologies and ethnological discourses: a comparison of the United Faculties at Leiden and Utrecht
   Jan de Wolf
   307

13 Crossing borders, healing wounds: Leiden anthropology and the colonial encounter 1917–1949
   Michael Prager
   326

14 The Japanese and Dutch anthropology of insular South-East Asia in the colonial period 1879–1949
   Jan van Bremen
   362

Afterword
Colonialism, anthropology and the politics of professionalisation: an argumentative afterword
   Eyal Ben-Ari
   384

vi