Foreign in a Domestic Sense

Puerto Rico, American Expansion, and the Constitution

Edited by Christina Duffy Burnett and Burke Marshall

Contents

xi  Preface

1  Between the Foreign and the Domestic: The Doctrine of Territorial Incorporation, Invented and Reinvented
   Christina Duffy Burnett and Burke Marshall

I. HISTORY AND EXPANSION

39  Some Common Ground
    José A. Cabranes

48  Teutonic Constitutionalism: The Role of Ethno-Juridical Discourse in the Spanish-American War
    Mark S. Weiner

82  A Constitution Led by the Flag: The Insular Cases and the Metaphor of Incorporation
    Brook Thomas

194  Deconstructing Colonialism: The “Unincorporated Territory” as a Category of Domination
     Efrén Rivera Ramos

II. EXPANSION AND CONSTITUTION

121  Installing the Insular Cases into the Canon of Constitutional Law
     Sanford Levinson
Fulfilling Manifest Destiny: Conquest, Race, and the Insular Cases
Juan F. Perea

U.S. Territorial Expansion: Extended Republicanism versus Hyperextended Expansionism
E. Robert Statham Jr.

Constitutionalism and Individual Rights in the Territories
Gerald L. Neuman

III. CONSTITUTION AND MEMBERSHIP

Partial Membership and Liberal Political Theory
Mark Tushnet

Injustice According to Law: The Insular Cases and Other Oddities
José Trias Monge

One Hundred Years of Solitude: Puerto Rico’s American Century
Juan R. Torruella

A Tale of Distorting Mirrors: One Hundred Years of Puerto Rico’s Sovereignty Imbroglio
Roberto P. Aponte Toro

IV. MEMBERSHIP AND RECOGNITION

Law, Language, and Statehood: The Role of English in the Great State of Puerto Rico
José Julián Álvarez González

Puerto Rican National Identity and United States Pluralism
Ángel Ricardo Oquendo
349  Puerto Rican Separatism and United States Federalism
    Richard Thornburgh

373  The Bitter Roots of Puerto Rican Citizenship
    Rogers M. Smith

389  A Note on the Insular Cases
    Christina Duffy Burnett

393  Notes on Contributors

395  Index