Historical Fiction for Children

Capturing the Past

Edited by Fiona M Collins and Judith Graham

David Fulton Publishers
London
Contents

Introduction v

Contributors' biographies vii

Section 1 Exploring the narrative past 1
1 Dogs and cats: the nineteenth-century historical novel for children 2
Dennis Butts

2 The twentieth century – giving everybody a history 10
Fiona M. Collins and Judith Graham

3 The silent ages: prehistory and Peter Dickinson 23
Peter Hollindale

4 A havey-cavey business: language in historical fiction with particular reference to the novels of Joan Aiken and Leon Garfield 32
Gillian Lathey

5 'Time no longer' – history, enchantment and the classic time-slip story 43
Linda Hall

6 The historical picture book – is it a ‘good thing’? 54
Judith Graham

7 Beyond expectations: historical fiction and working children 64
Liz Thiel

8 Passage to America: migration and change 73
Fiona M. Collins
Section 2 Writing about the narrative past

9 Waking quests
Julian Atterton

10 ‘Over the stile and into the past’: Children of Winter and other historical fiction
Berlie Doherty

11 Flesh on the bones
Michael Foreman

12 Daddy, or serendipity
Philip Pullman

13 History and time
Rosemary Sutcliff

Section 3 Teaching the narrative past

14 Up and Down the City Road: history through dramatic action
Geoff Fox

15 Stimulating the historical imagination: working with primary age children on books about the plague
Andrea Fellows

16 Getting under the skin: the EACH Project
Alun Hicks and Dave Martin

17 Slavery and the Underground Railroad: working with students
Liz Laycock

Bibliography

Index