The Uncertain Superpower
Domestic Dimensions of U.S. Foreign Policy after the Cold War

Bernhard May · Michaela Hönicke Moore (Hrsg.)

Leske + Budrich, Opladen 2003
Contents

Notes on the Contributors ........................................................................................................... 7

Bernhard May
Introduction: The Uncertain Superpower after ‘September 11’ ............................................. 9

Part I
Constitutional and Institutional Dimensions: Executive, Legislative, Public Opinion and the Media ........................................................................................................................................ 13

Stanley R. Sloan
Constitutional and Institutional Dimensions: White House-Congress Relations After the End of the ‘Imperial Presidency’ ................................................................. 15

Michaela Hönicke Moore
Divided Government: The Democratic Dilemma of Making U.S. Foreign Policy ......................... 29

James M. Lindsay
Apathy, Interest, and the Politics of American Foreign Policy .................................................... 41

Gebhard Schweigler
Domestic Sources of US Foreign Policy ...................................................................................... 57

Part II
U.S. Leadership and the Reform of Western Security Institutions .......................................... 67

Peter W. Rodman
“U.S. Leadership and the Reform of Western Security Institutions: NATO Enlargement and ESDP” .................................................................................................................................... 69
Charles A. Kupchan
Recasting the Atlantic Bargain ................................................................. 83

Peter Rudolf
U.S. Leadership and the Reform of Western Security Institutions:
NATO-Enlargement and ESDP .................................................................. 93

Part III
U.S. Leadership in Crisis: The Balkans, Russia and China ...................... 103

David Ryan
‘With One Hand Tied Behind Our Back’: Collective Memory, The Media And US Intervention From The Gulf War To Afghanistan .......... 105

Paul S. Shoup
U.S. Policy Toward The Balkans: The Role Of Domestic Factors
And Lessons Learned ............................................................................... 121

Thomas E. Graham, Jr.
U.S. Leadership and Domestic Factors in Dealing with Russia
During the Clinton Administration ......................................................... 133

Susan L. Shirk

Part IV
U.S. Leadership in International Institutions and Multilateral
Regime-Building .................................................................................. 159

Edward C. Luck
False Choices: Unilateralism, Multilateralism, and U.S. Foreign Policy ..................................................................................................... 161

Petra Holtrup
The Lack of U.S. Leadership in Climate Change Diplomacy ............... 185

Selected Reading List ............................................................................. 208