CONTENTS
List of illustrations vii
List of case studies viii
Authors’ biographies ix

INTRODUCTION 1

1  NEW MEDIA AND NEW TECHNOLOGIES 9
1.1 What are new media? 9
  1.1.1 ‘The media’ as an institution 9
  1.1.2 The intensity of change 10
  1.1.3 The ideological connotations of the new 11
  1.1.4 Non-technical and inclusive 11
  1.1.5 Distinguishing between kinds of new media 12
1.2 The characteristics of new media: some defining concepts 13
  1.2.1 Digitality 14
  1.2.2 Interactivity 19
  1.2.3 Hypertext 23
  1.2.4 Dispersal 30
  1.2.5 Virtuality 34
  1.2.6 Which virtual reality? 35
  1.2.7 Cyberspace 35
  1.2.8 Conclusion 37
1.3 Change and continuity 37
  1.3.1 Introduction 37
  1.3.2 Measuring ‘newness’ 38
1.4 What kind of history? 44
  1.4.1 Teleological accounts of new media 45
  1.4.2 New media and the modernist concept of progress 53
  1.4.3 The return of the Middle Ages and other media archaeologies 56
  1.4.4 A sense of déjà vu 58
  1.4.5 Conclusion 59
1.5 Who was dissatisfied with old media? 59
  1.5.1 The question 59
  1.5.2 The technological imaginary 60
  1.5.3 The discursive construction of new media 62
  1.5.4 Conclusion 68
  1.5.5 The return of the Frankfurt School critique in the popularisation of new media 68
  1.5.6 Conclusion 71
1.6 New media: determining or determined? 72
  1.6.1 The status of McLuhan and Williams 72
  1.6.2 Mapping Marshall McLuhan 75
  1.6.3 Williams and the social shaping of technology 80

1.6.4 The many virtues of Saint McLuhan 84
1.6.5 Conclusion: the extent of the ‘extensions of man’ 90

Bibliography 92

2  NEW MEDIA AND VISUAL CULTURE 97
2.1 New technologies and the issues for visual culture 97
2.2 Visual culture 98
2.3 Visuality 101
2.4 Could there be a distinct digital visual culture? 102
2.5 New image technologies 104
2.6 Immersive virtual reality 107
  2.6.1 Is VR a new ‘visual’ medium? 107
  2.6.2 The importance of that which hardly exists 110
  2.6.3 Spheres collide: from imitation to simulation – VR’s operational history 112
  2.6.4 VR: the actuality and the hyperbole 115
  2.6.5 VR: trimming the metaphors 119
  2.6.6 VR as a discursive object 123
  2.6.7 VR’s cultural resources 124
2.7 VR as a medium of art: a quantum leap forward? 125
  2.7.1 What is Alberti’s window? 126
  2.7.2 The camera lens and the industrialisation of perspective 127
  2.7.3 Perspective as symbolic form 129
  2.7.4 The condition of Alberti’s window after VR 133
  2.7.5 Frames and surfaces 135
2.8 Digital cinema 136
  2.8.1 Virtual VR 137
  2.8.2 Virtual realism 138
  2.8.3 Special effects and hyperreality 146
  2.8.4 Thoroughly (post)modern Méliès, or the return of the repressed in digital cinema 149
  2.8.5 Audiences and effects 154

Bibliography 159

3  NETWORKS USERS AND ECONOMICS 164
3.0 Introduction 164
3.1 Networks: communities, audiences and users 164
3.2 What is the Internet? 165
3.3 Networks and identity 166
3.4 Learning to live in the interface 168
3.5 Networks and communities 172
3.6 Visionary communities 173
3.7 Defining community online 174
3.8 Networks as public spheres 176
3.9 The net as postmodern public sphere 178

Bibliography 159