American Culture, Canons, and the Case of Elizabeth Stoddard

Edited by Robert McClure Smith and Ellen Weinauer

THE UNIVERSITY OF ALABAMA PRESS
Tuscaloosa and London
Contents

Acknowledgments ix
Introduction: Crossing Can(n)on Street 1
Ellen Weinauer and Robert McClure Smith

Biographical Foreword: Elizabeth Drew Barstow Stoddard (1823–1902) 21
Sandra A. Zagarell

PART I. THE WRITER, THE CANON, AND THE PROTOCOLS OF PRINT

1. “Among a Crowd, I Find Myself Alone”: Elizabeth Stoddard and the Canon of Nineteenth-Century American Women’s Poetry 37
   Robert McClure Smith

2. Elizabeth Stoddard as Returned Californian: A Reading of the Daily Alta California Columns 65
   Margaret A. Amstutz

3. Haunting the House of Print: The Circulation of Disembodied Texts in “Collected by a Valetudinarian” and “Miss Grief” 83
   Paul Crumbley

PART 2. GENDER, SELFHOOD, AND THE DISCOURSE OF DOMESTICITY

4. “I Am Cruel Hungry”: Dramas of Twisted Appetite and Rejected Identification in Elizabeth Stoddard’s The Morgesons 107
   Julia Stern

5. “Perversions of Volition”: Self-Starvation and Self-Possession in Dickinson and Stoddard 128
   Susanna Ryan

   Jaime Osterman Alves
PART 3. RACE, RECONSTRUCTION, AND AMERICAN CITIZENSHIP

7. The "American Sphinx" and the Riddle of National Identity in Elizabeth Stoddard's Two Men 183
   Jennifer Putzi

8. (Un)Natural Attractions? Incest and Miscegenation in Two Men 202
   Lisa Radinovsky

9. Reconstructing Temple House 232
   Ellen Weinauer

Afterword: Will Stoddard Endure? 265
   Lawrence Buell

Works Cited 271
Contributors 287
Index 289