Forgetting in Early Modern English Literature and Culture
Lethe's legacies

Edited by Christopher Ivic and
Grant Williams
Contents

[List of figures] vii
[List of contributors] viii
[Acknowledgments] x

Introduction: sites of forgetting in early modern English literature and culture
GRANT WILLIAMS AND CHRISTOPHER IVIC

PART I

Embodiments 19

1 The decay of memory
WILLIAM E. ENGEL 21

2 Lethargic corporeality on and off the early modern stage
GARRETT A. SULLIVAN JR 41

3 Pleasure's oblivion: displacements of generation in Spenser's Faerie Queene
ELIZABETH D. HARVEY 53

PART II

Signs 65

4 Textual crudities in Robert Burton's Anatomy of Melancholy
and Thomas Browne's Pseudodoxia Epidemica
GRANT WILLIAMS 67

5 Off the subject: early modern poets on rhyme, distraction, and forgetfulness
AMANDA WATSON 83
PART III
Narratives

6 Reassuring fratricide in 1 Henry IV
CHRISTOPHER IVIC

7 "The religion I was born in": forgetting Catholicism and remembering the king in Donne's Devotions
DAVID J. BAKER

8 Legends of oblivion: enchantment and enslavement in Book 6 of Spenser's Faerie Queene
ELIZABETH MAZZOLA

PART IV
Localities

9 Nomadic Eros: remapping knowledge in A Midsummer Night's Dream
PHILIPPA BERRY

10 "Unless you could teach me to forget": spectatorship, self-forgetting, and subversion in antitheatrical literature and As You Like It
ZACKARIAH LONG

11 Reading reformed: Spenser and the problem of the English library
JENNIFER SUMMIT

Bibliography
Index