The Archaeology of Contact in Settler Societies

TIM MURRAY

La Trobe University

CAMBRIDGE UNIVERSITY PRESS
Contents

List of figures [page ix]
List of tables [xii]
List of contributors [xiii]

1 The archaeology of contact in settler societies [1]
   TIM MURRAY

PART I DIVERSE CONTACTS AND CONSEQUENCES

2 Beads, bodies and regimes of value: from France to North America, c. 1500–c. 1650 [19]
   LAURIER TURGEON

3 Ships for the taking: culture contact and the maritime fur trade on the Northwest Coast of North America [48]
   STEVEN ACHESON AND JAMES P. DELGADO

4 Culture contact viewed through ceramic petrography at the Pueblo mission of Abó, New Mexico [78]
   PATRICIA CAPONE

5 The transformation of indigenous societies in the south-western Cape during the rule of the Dutch East India Company, 1652–1795 [91]
   YVONNE BRINK

6 Contact archaeology and the landscapes of pastoralism in the north-west of Australia [109]
   RODNEY HARRISON

7 Tenacity of the traditional: the first hundred years of Maori–European settler contact on the Hauraki Plains, Aotearoa/New Zealand [144]
   STUART BEDFORD

vii
PART II ISSUES AND METHODS

8 Fur trade archaeology in western Canada: who is digging up the forts? [157]
   OLGA KLIJKO

9 Contact archaeology and the writing of Aboriginal history [176]
   CHRISTINE WILLIAMSON

10 In the footsteps of George Dutton: developing a contact archaeology of temperate Aboriginal Australia [200]
   TIM MURRAY

Bibliography [226]
Index [263]