Contents

List of illustrations  ix
Notes on the contributors xi
Acknowledgements xiv

1 Introduction 1
Christine Alexander and Juliet McMaster

PART I: CHILDHOOD WRITINGS

2 Nineteenth-century juvenilia: a survey 11
Christine Alexander

3 Play and apprenticeship: the culture of family magazines 31
Christine Alexander

4 What Daisy knew: the epistemology of the child writer 51
Juliet McMaster

5 Defining and representing literary juvenilia 70
Christine Alexander

PART II: INDIVIDUAL AUTHORS

6 Jane Austen, that disconcerting ‘child’ 101
Margaret Anne Doody

7 Endless imitation: Austen’s and Byron’s juvenilia 122
Rachel M. Brownstein

8 Childhood writings of Elizabeth Barrett Browning: ‘At four I first mounted Pegasus’ 138
Beverly Taylor
9 Autobiography and juvenilia: the fractured self in Charlotte Brontë’s early manuscripts
   Christine Alexander 154

10 The child is parent to the author: Branwell Brontë
   Victor A. Neufeldt 173

11 Choosing a model: George Eliot’s ’prentice hand
   Juliet McMaster 188

12 Precocity and the economy of the evangelical self in John Ruskin’s juvenilia
   David C. Hanson 200

13 Louisa May Alcott’s juvenilia
   Daniel Shealy 222

14 Dr Arnold’s granddaughter: Mary Augusta Ward
   Gillian E. Boughton 237

15 New Woman, ‘New Boots’: Amy Levy as child journalist
   Naomi Hetherington 254

16 An annotated bibliography of nineteenth-century juvenilia
   Lesley Peterson and Leslie Robertson 269

Index 304