Ulster–New Zealand Migration and Cultural Transfers

Brad Patterson
EDITOR

FOUR COURTS PRESS
Contents

_Acknowledgments_

_Introduction_

1 How Ulster was New Zealand?
*Malcolm Campbell_

2 The invisible Irish? Re-discovering Irish Protestant traditions in colonial New Zealand
*Alasdair Galbraith_

3 Who were New Zealand’s Ulster immigrants?
*Jock Phillips_

4 Ulster Protestant letter writers in New Zealand
*Angela McCarthy_

5 New Zealand’s ‘Ulster Plantation’: Katikati revisited
*Brad Patterson_

6 A man of the right stamp: Fitz Gibbon Louch, architect
*Shirley Arabin_

7 ‘We are all here together like so many on the cockle beds’: towards a history of Ulster migrants in nineteenth-century Canterbury
*Sarah Dwyer and Lyndon Fraser_

8 Rutherford Waddell: an Ulster radical in Otago’s Scottish Kirk
*Seán Brosnahan_

9 When is a Mick not a Mick? A sportsman in Ireland, New Zealand and elsewhere
*Neal Garnham_

10 Towards a history of Orangeism in New Zealand
*Rory Sweetman_

11 Was there a hidden ‘Orange mark’ on the New Zealand labour movement?
*Melanie Nolan_
12 Ulster settlers and the colonial middle class
Jim McAloon

13 Moneyless at Moneymore; moneybags at Martinborough:
the life and times of John Martin
Roberta McIntyre

14 Thompson, Shannon & Co., Wellington’s Ulster
entrepreneurs, 1874–88
Richard P. Davis

15 Carbuncle Jack and Mr Punch of Canterbury
Edmund Bohan

16 How Irish was New Zealand’s Ulster-born prime minister
Bill Massey?
Geoffrey W. Rice

17 ‘I am Irish myself’: W.F. Massey and Ireland, 1912–25
James Watson

List of contributors

Index