Contents

Corpus linguistics and the web
Marianne Hundt, Nadja Nesselhauf and Carolin Biewer

Accessing the web as corpus

Using web data for linguistic purposes
Anke Lüdeling, Stefan Evert and Marco Baroni

Concordancing the web: promise and problems, tools and techniques
William H. Fletcher

WebCorp: an integrated system for web text search
Antoinette Renouf, Andrew Kehoe and Jayeeta Banerjee

Compiling corpora from the internet

From webpage to mega-corpus: the CNN transcripts
Sebastian Hoffmann

Constructing a corpus from the web: message boards
Claudia Claridge

Towards a taxonomy of web registers and text types: a multi-dimensional analysis
Douglas Biber and Jerry Kurjian

Critical voices

New resources, or just better old ones? The Holy Grail of representativeness
Geoffrey Leech

An under-exploited resource: using the BNC for exploring the nature of language learning
Graeme Kennedy
Contents

Language variation and change

Exploring constructions on the web: a case study
Anette Rosenbach

Determinants of grammatical variation in English and the formation / confirmation of linguistic hypotheses by means of internet data
Günter Rohdenburg

Recalcitrant problems of comparative alternation and new insights emerging from internet data
Britta Mondorf

Change and variation in present-day English: integrating the analysis of closed corpora and web-based monitoring
Christian Mair

The dynamics of inner and outer circle varieties in the South Pacific and East Asia
Marianne Hundt and Carolin Biewer

'He rung the bell' and 'she drunk ale' – non-standard past tense forms in traditional British dialects and on the internet
Lieselotte Anderwald

Diachronic analysis with the internet? Will and shall in ARCHER and in a corpus of e-texts from the web
Nadja Nesselhauf