Employment Deconcentration in European Metropolitan Areas

Market Forces versus Planning Regulations

Edited by

ERAN RAZIN
The Hebrew University of Jerusalem, Israel

MARTIN DIJST
University of Utrecht, The Netherlands

and

CARMEN VÁZQUEZ
University of Castilla-La Mancha, Spain

Springer
Table of Contents

Contributing Authors ix
Preface xiii

1. Introduction: deconcentration of economic activities within metropolitan regions: A qualitative framework for cross-national comparison 1
   Eran Razin

2. Economic deconcentration in a rational planning system: The Dutch case 29
   Annet Bogaerts, Frans Dieleman, Martin Dijst and Stan Geertman

3. Deconcentration of workplaces in greater Copenhagen: Successes and failures of location strategies in regional planning 53
   Peter Hartoft-Nielsen

4. Economic deconcentration processes in mid-sized English cities: Deconcentrated outcomes and spatially differentiated impacts 89
   Ian Smith

5. The Spanish way to economic deconcentration: A process of several speeds 115
   Manuel Valenzuela, Carmen Vázquez, Antonio J. Palacios, and Ángel Jodra

6. The Italian way to deconcentration. Rome: The appeal of the historic centre. Chieti-Pescara: The strength of the periphery 145
   Armando Montanari, Barbara Staniscia, Simone Di Zio

7. Deconcentration in a context of population growth and ideological change: The Tel-Aviv and Beer-Sheva metropolitan areas 179
   Eran Razin and Arie Shachar

8. Sprawling post-communist metropolis: Commercial and residential suburbanization in Prague and Brno, the Czech Republic 209
   Luděk Sýkora and Martin Oufedníček
9. The impact of retail deconcentration on travel to hypermarkets in Prague
   Yaakov Garb

235

10. Employment deconcentration in European metropolitan areas: A comprehensive comparison and policy implications
    Martin Dijst and Carmen Vázquez

265

Index

293