Table of Contents

Acknowledgements and Editorial Policy ........................................... 11

Marc Maufort
Performing Aotearoa in an Age of Transition ................................ 13

David O'Donnell
"Whaddarya?" Questioning National Identity in New Zealand Drama .................................................... 17

Christopher Balme
Staging Pan-Polynesian identity at the New Zealand International Exhibition, Christchurch 1906-07 .................................................. 27

Murray Edmond
Re-membering the Remembering Body: "Autonomous Theatre" in New Zealand ................................................. 45

Bronwyn Tweddle
Where Grotowski Meets Lecoq. "Flow" in Training at Toi Whakaari: New Zealand Drama School .................................................. 69

Susan Williams
Advocating Interaction with "the Other": Robert Lord's Use of the Food Metaphor .................................................. 87

William Peterson
Writing into the Land: Dramatic Monologues in the Expanding Landscape of Aotearoa/New Zealand ......................... 103

Marc Maufort
Painful Homecomings: Family Fractures in Contemporary Pākehā Dramaturgies .................................................. 121

Telling Pākehā stories
Lisa Warrington Interviews Gary Henderson ................................ 139

"Theatre is the lightning rod"
David O'Donnell Interviews Ken Duncum ................................ 147

Stuart Young
Masque(e)rades of Masculinity: Cross-Dressing Women on the New Zealand Stage .................................................. 163
Completing the Circle
David O’Donnell Interviews Jean Betts .................................................183

Te Ahukaramū Charles Royal
Ōrotokare. Towards a New Model for Indigenous
Theatre and Performing Arts ..........................................................193

“Let me feel the magic”
Hilary Halba Interviews Rangimoana Taylor ........................................209

David Carnegie and David O’Donnell
Māori Dramaturgy: The Case of Nga Tangata Toa ................................219

Hone Kouka
Re-Colonising the Natives:
The State of Contemporary Māori Theatre ........................................237

Marc Maufort
Recapturing Māori Spirituality:
Briar Grace-Smith’s Magic Realist Stage Aesthetic ................................247

Calming the Oceans
David O’Donnell Interviews Briar Grace-Smith ......................................269

Sharon Mazer
Atamira Dance Collective:
Dancing in the Footsteps of the Ancestors ...........................................283

Peter Falkenberg
Theatre of Unease .............................................................................293

David O’Donnell
Re-claiming the “Fob”:
The Immigrant Family in Samoan Drama ........................................307

“Everything is family”
David O’Donnell Interviews Nathaniel Lees ...........................................331

Lisa Warrington
A Place to Tell Our Stories:
Asian Voices in the Theatre of Aotearoa ..............................................349

“Truth is always stranger than fiction”
David O’Donnell Interviews Lynda Chanwai-Earle ..................................369

“We want to create work that’s beautiful, funny, sad and true”
Lisa Warrington Interviews Jacob Rajan ..............................................383

John Davies
The Audience Are Stones ....................................................................391
Table of Contents

William Farrimond
  Mask, Moko and Memory: Identity through
  Solo Performance in a Post-colonial World..................................407

Trisha Dunleavy
  Narratives of Identity:
  TV Drama Production in New Zealand ........................................431

Notes on Contributors.................................................................455

Index..................................................................................................459