Hanne Bewernick

The Storyteller’s Memory Palace

A Method of Interpretation
Based on the Function of Memory Systems in Literature

Geoffrey Chaucer, William Langland, Salman Rushdie, Angela Carter,
Thomas Pynchon and Paul Auster
Contents

Introduction ......................................................................................................................... 9

Chapter 1
Ancient and Medieval Memory Techniques: Entering the Memory Palace .................. 17
Alphabet- and number-systems ....................................................................................... 21 division and arrangement (22) association and image making (24)
Extensions of the Memory Palace: Geometric Shapes and Memory Journeys ........... 27 directional shapes (27) journey method (31)
Direct Literary Appropriation: Allegory ........................................................................... 34
Memory and the Page .......................................................................................................... 39 design (39)
Conclusion: Creative Thinking ......................................................................................... 45

Chapter 2
Medieval Literature: Geoffrey Chaucer and William Langland .................................. 47
Chaucer – The House of Fame .......................................................................................... 52
the temple of venus (53) the palace of fame (55) the house of rumours (58)
Chaucer – Troilus and Criseyde ....................................................................................... 59
the journey method (61) the town map (66)
Langland – Piers Plowman .............................................................................................. 68 memory references (69) the backgrounds: personifications (72)
the images: metaphors and figures (77) mnemonic structures (82)

Chapter 3
Modern Memory Concepts: Neuropsychology and Literary Theory ......................... 87
Neuropsychology ............................................................................................................... 89 pattern or network (90) a shared terminology (91) chunking and spatial awareness (93) criticism of the ancient art of memory (95) Neuropsychology and Storytelling .................................................................................. 98 integration into existing memory structures (100) the word and the image (102)
creative thinking (104)
Neuropsychology and Literary Criticism ......................................................................... 107
suzanne nalbantian (108) john s. rickard (111) renate lachmann (115)
conclusion (117)

Chapter 4
The Modern English Novel: Salman Rushdie and Angela Carter ............................... 119 unreliable narration and memory (119) seven memory sins and literature (121) Salman Rushdie – Expanding Views ............................................................................... 124 collective memory (126) rushdie’s leitmotif - bartlett’s anchor points (127) imaginary landscapes (129) typical backgrounds (130) three backgrounds in midnight's children (133) background 1: a kashmiri valley (133) background 2: the pioneer café (136) background 3: the purgatorial jungle (139) identity and the loss of self (141)
conclusion (143)

Angela Carter – The Stage and the Swan ................................................................. 144 artificial memory (145) nights at the circus (147) typical backgrounds (147) surrealist influences (150) blurring the edges (152)
the stage background and the swan image (156) conclusion (163)

Chapter 5

The Modern US Novel: Thomas Pynchon and Paul Auster ........................................ 165

Thomas Pynchon – Vineland: An Exercise in Remembering ........................................ 166 confusing chronology and paranoia (167) entirely reliable memories (170) pastoral backgrounds (178) urban backgrounds (181)
the memory map (182) architectural memory (185)
the memory journey 1: the chain (187) the memory journey 2: crossings (188)

Paul Auster – Moon Palace: Renaissance Mysticism .................................................... 191
Step 1: Auster’s concept of memory ................................................................................. 191
the renaissance art of memory (192)
historical remembrance or creative process? (194) history (195) creativity (198)
Step 2: Backgrounds and their significance ................................................................. 200 the significance of the physical setting (200) the significance of space (201)
the memory palace 1: mental spaces (203) the memory palace 2: the room (205)
Step 3: Background connections .................................................................................... 208 memory systems as literary patterns 1: word association (209) memory systems as literary patterns 2: the memory map (211)
Step 4: Image and interpretation ...................................................................................... 213 interpreting the painting (214) interpreting the novel (216)
the meaning of images (217) conclusion (220)

Conclusion .................................................................................................................. 223
the theory (223) the practical application (224)

The Memory Palace Method ..................................................................................... 225
Step 1. The general concept of memory ............................................................................ 225
Step 2. The particular type of background ....................................................................... 227
Step 3. The structural connection of backgrounds .......................................................... 229 categorisation of systems (229) alphabet- and number-systems (231)
the journey method (233) the memory map (233)
the memory building (235) summary (236)
Step 4. The significance of images .................................................................................... 236 topics not mentioned or only lightly touched upon (239)

Bibliography ................................................................................................................ 243