American Cinema and the Southern Imaginary

edited by DEBORAH E. BARKER and
KATHRYN MCKEE
Acknowledgments ix

Introduction: The Southern Imaginary 1
Deborah E. Barker and Kathryn McKee

I. Rereading the Hollywood South

The Celluloid War before The Birth: Race and History in Early American Film 27
Robert Jackson

Mammy’s “Mules” and the Rules of Marriage in Gone with the Wind 52
Riché Richardson

Bodies and Expectations: Chain Gang Discipline 79
Leigh Anne Duck

The Postwar Cinematic South: Realism and the Politics of Liberal Consensus 104
Chris Cagle

Matthew H. Bernstein

II. Viewing the Civil Rights South

Black Passing and White Pluralism: Imitation of Life in the Civil Rights Struggle 151
Ryan DeRosa
Remembering Birmingham Sunday: Spike Lee’s 4 Little Girls
Valerie Smith

Exploitation Movies and the Freedom Struggle of the 1960s
Sharon Monteith

III. Crossing Borders

Mapping out a Postsouthern Cinema: Three Contemporary Films
Jay Watson

The Native Screen: American Indians in Contemporary Southern Film
Melanie R. Benson

The City That Déjà Vu Forgot: Memory, Mapping, and the Americanization of New Orleans
Briallen Hopper

Humid Time: Independent Film, Gay Sexualities, and Southernscapes
R. Bruce Brasell

Papa Legba and the Liminal Spaces of the Blues: Roots Music in Deep South Film
Christopher J. Smith

Revamping the South: Thoughts on Labor, Relationality, and Southern Representation
Tara McPherson

Contributors

Index