Table of Contents

Elizabeth F. Evans and Sarah E. Cornish • Introduction .................................................. vii
Acknowledgments ................................................................................................................... xiii
List of Abbreviations ............................................................................................................. xiv

Keynotes

Tamar Katz • Pausing, Waiting, Repeating: Urban Temporality in Mrs. Dalloway and The Years .......................................................................................................................... 2
Anna Snaith • The Years, Street Music, and Acoustic Space (abstract of plenary address) ......................................................................................................................... 17
Jessica Berman • “You then”: Three Guineas, the Spanish Civil War, and the Challenge of Total War (abstract of plenary address) ................................................................. 18

Navigating London

Caroline Pollentier • Imagining Flânerie Beyond Anthropocentrism: Virginia Woolf, the London Archipelago, and City Tortoises ................................................................. 20
Eleanor McNees • Public Transport in Woolf’s City Novels: The London Omnibus ........ 31
Alexandra Harris • Virginia Woolf Underground ................................................................ 40
Kathryn Simpson • “Street Haunting,” Commodity Culture, and the Woman Artist .......... 47
Diane F. Gillespie • A City in the Archives: Virginia Woolf and the Statues of London .... 55

Spatial Perceptions and the Cityscape

Kimberly Engdahl Coates • Queering London: Virginia Woolf and the Politics of Perception ............................................................................................................................. 64
Elicia Clements • Reconfigured Terrain: Aural Architecture in Jacob’s Room and The Years ......................................................................................................................... 71
Federico Sabatini • “Dark pours over the outlines of houses and towers”: Virginia Woolf’s Prismatic Poetics of Space .......................................................... 77

Regarding Others

Mark Hussey • Woolf and the Falling Man ............................................................................. 88
Molly Hite • “How Strange”: Affective and Evaluative Uncertainty in Mrs. Dalloway .... 95
Christine W. Sizemore • Cosmopolitanism From Below in Mrs. Dalloway and “Street Haunting” ........................................................................................................... 104
THE LITERARY PUBLIC SPHERE

Melissa Sullivan • The Bestseller and the City: Flush, The Barretts of Wimpole Street, and Cultural Hierarchies .................................................. 112
Erica Gene Delsandro • To “make that country our own country”: The Years, Novelistic Historiography, and the 1930s ........................................ 120
Mia Spiro • Between Public and Private Acts: Woolf’s Anti-Fascist Strategies .................................................................................. 130
Elisa Kay Sparks • Metropolis Unbound: Virginia Woolf’s Heterotopian Utopian Impulse ............................................................... 136
Suzanne Bellamy • New World Archives: Scattered Seeds of a New Scholarship ........................................................................ 143

BORDER CROSSINGS AND LIMINAL LANDSCAPES

Vara Neverow • Contrasting Urban and Rural Transgressive Sexualities in Jacob’s Room ........................................................................ 154
Rishona Zimring • “No Room for More”: Woolf’s Journey from London to Scotland, 1938 ................................................................. 161
Randi Saloman • “Directly a box was unpacked the rooms became very different”: Hotel Life and The Voyage Out .......................................... 167
Leslie Kathleen Hankins • An Archive in the City: “True Pictures” and Animated News Films of Suffragettes in the Holographs of Virginia Woolf’s “The Movies” in the Berg Collection ....................................................... 173
Jane Goldman • “When dogs will become men”: Melancholia, Canine Allegories, and Theriocephalous Figures in Woolf’s Urban Contact Zones .......................................................................................... 180

TEACHING WOOLF, WOOLF TEACHING

Beth Rigel Daugherty • The Streets of London: Virginia Woolf’s Development of a Pedagogical Style ...................................................... 190
Cheryl Hindrichs • “Find Our Own Way for Ourselves”: Orlando as an Uncommon Reader in the Critical Theory Classroom .................... 195
Sevinc Kurt • Recreating Woolf’s Public and Private Spaces in Architectural Design Education ............................................................. 204
Paula Maggio • Virginia Woolf in the Cyber City: Connecting in the Virtual Public Square ....................................................................... 212

INSPIRED BY WOOLF: A CONVERSATION

Megan Branch • Forward: The Legacy of Virginia Woolf ....................................................................................................................... 218
Ruth Gruber, Katherine Lanpher, and Susan Sellers with Kris Lundberg • Inspired by Woolf: A Conversation ................................................ 220

Notes on Contributors ........................................................................ 233
Conference Program ........................................................................... 238