Transnational Gothic
Literary and Social Exchanges in the Long Nineteenth Century

MONIKA ELBERT
Montclair State University, USA

and

BRIDGET M. MARSHALL
University of Massachusetts, Lowell, USA

ASHGATE
Contents

List of Contributors vii
Acknowledgments xi

Introduction 1
Bridget M. Marshall and Monika Elbert

Part 1 Old World Gothic and the New World Frontier
1 A Transnational Perspective on American Gothic Criticism 19
Siân Silyn Roberts
2 Transcultural Gothic: Isaac Mitchell’s Alonzo and Melissa as an Early Example of Popular Culture 35
Christian Knirsch
3 The Old Gothic and the New: The Trollopes’ Wild West 49
Tamara Wagner
4 Frontier Bloodlust in England: American Captivity Narratives and Stoker’s Dracula 69
Roland Finger

Part 2 Gothic Catholicism
5 Demonizing the Catholic Other: Religion and the Secularization Process in Gothic Literature 83
Diane Long Hoeveler
6 A Woman with a Cross: The Transgressive, Transnational Nun in Anti-Catholic Fiction 97
Nancy F. Sweet
7 The Paradox of Catholicism in New England Women’s Gothic 113
Monika Elbert

Part 3 Anglo-American Genre Exchanges: Beyond the Novel
8 The Haunted Transatlantic Libertine: Edmund Kean’s American Tour 139
Melissa Wehler
9 Gothic Prosody: Monkish Perversity and the Poetics of Weird Form 155
Daniel Robinson
Transnational Gothic

Part 4  Social Anxieties and Hauntings

11 "At rest now": Child Ghosts and Social Justice in Nineteenth-Century Women’s Writing
   Roxanne Harde
   189

12 All This Difficult Darkness: Lynching and the Exorcism of the Black Other in Theodore Dreiser’s “Nigger Jeff”
   Keith B. Mitchell
   201

13 “Duppy Know Who Fi Frighten”: Laying Ghosts in Jamaican Fiction
   Candace Ward
   217

14 Stranger Fiction: The Asian Ghost Tales of Rudyard Kipling and Lafcadio Hearn
   Mary Goodwin
   237

Index

255