Gender and Space in British Literature, 1660–1820

Edited by
MONA NARAIN
Texas Christian University, USA

and

KAREN GEVIRTZ
Seton Hall University, USA

ASHGATE
Contents

Notes on Contributors ix
Acknowledgements xii

Introduction 1

Part I Outside
1 Constructing Place in Oroonoko Laura L. Runge 19
2 Creole Space: Jamaica, Fallen Women, and British Literature Aleksandra Hultquist 33
3 “Going Native”: Geography, Gender, and Identity in Lady Mary Wortley Montagu’s Turkish Embassy Letters Ambereen Dadabhoy 49
4 Margaret Bryan and Jane Marcet: Making Space for “Space” in British Women’s Science Writing Kristine Larsen 67

Part II Borderlands
5 The Space of British Exile in Frances Burney’s The Wanderer and Germaine de Staël’s Corinne Pamela Cheek 85
6 “Ever restless waters”: Female Identity and Coastal Space in Charlotte Smith’s The Young Philosopher Zoë Kinsley 101
7 Writing from the Road: Space and the Spectacle of Hortense Mancini, Duchess of Mazarin Courtney Beggs 117

Part III Inside
8 New Models for the Literary Garden: Women’s Amatory Novels of the 1720s Mary Crone-Romanovski 133
9 Anne Finch’s Strategic Retreat into the Country House Jeong-Oh Kim 147
10 Masculinity, Space, and Late Seventeenth-Century Alchemical Practices
Laura Miller 165

11 Invaded Spaces in Charlotte Smith's The Banished Man (1794)
Heather Ann Ladd 179

12 Seeking Shelter in Charlotte Smith's Emmeline
Kathleen M. Oliver 195

Bibliography 211
Index 231