Table of contents

List of contributors

Introduction

Ilja A. Serżant, Chiara Fedriani & Leonid Kulikov

PART I. Rise of non-canonical subjects or subject-like obliques

- Non selected dative arguments in Spanish anticausative constructions: Exploring subjecthood
  Olga Fernández-Soriano & Amaya Mendikoetxea

- The rise of animacy-based differential subject marking in Dutch
  Helen de Hoop

- The rise of oblique subjects in Russian
  Hakyung Jung

- Non-canonical subject marking: Genitive subjects in Classical Armenian
  Daniel Kolligan

- The rise of non-canonical subjects and semantic alignments in Hindi
  Annie Montaut

PART II. Historical changes in constructions with non-canonical subjects or subject-like obliques

- Experiencers and psychological noun predicates: From Latin to Italian
  Marina Benedetti

- Between Finnic and Indo-European: Variation and change in the Estonian experiencer-object construction
  Liina Lindström

- On the historical expansion of non-canonically marked 'subjects' in Spanish
  Chantal Melis & Marcela Flores

PART III. From non-canonical subjects or subject-like obliques to canonical subjects

- Subjects in Scandinavian
  Jan Terje Faarlund
The me pudet construction in the history of Latin:
why and how fast non-canonical subjects come and go
Chiara Fedriani

203

Diachrony of experiencer subject marking: Evidence from East Caucasian
Dmitry Ganenkov

231

Obliqueness, quasi-subjects and transitivity in Baltic and Slavonic
Axel Holvoet

257

Rise of canonical subjecthood
Ilja A. Seržant

283

Synthesis
The diachronic typology of non-canonical subjects and subject-like obliques
Ilja A. Seržant

313

Language index

361

Subject index

363