

CONTENTS

1	Introduction	1
2	Class Conflicts, Compromises and Consensus: Theoretical Background and Conceptual Problems	9
2.1	Marxist theories on class compromises in capitalism	9
2.2	Consensus and compromise	13
2.3	Consensus as device for compromise: the hegemonial structure of capitalist society	21
2.4	Income distribution and accumulation: the non-zero sum approach	24
3	Classes as Strategic Actors, Centralized Bargaining and Corporatism	37
3.1	Objectives of centralized federations of trade unions and employers' associations in capitalist democracies	38
3.1.1	Centralized federations of trade unions	38
3.1.2	Centralized employers' organizations	40
3.2	Effects of centralized wage bargaining	43
3.3	Corporatism and centralized wage bargaining	48
4	Centralized Wage Bargaining and the State: the 'Logic' of Explicit Class Compromise	59
4.1	The basic model: the decentralized wage regime	60
4.2	Centralized bargaining: the corporatist wage regime	69
4.3	The state in the decentralized wage regime: efficiency of economic policy without institutional change	77
4.4	Economic policy, centralized bargaining and corporatism	84

Appendices
4.5.I	A variable accumulation share	91
4.5.II	Theories on bargaining	94
5	Collective action problems and the instability of societal bargaining	107
5.1	The logic and relevance of the theory on collective action	107
5.2	Stability of class compromises and collective action problems	117
5.3	Instability and the role of the state: corporatism reconsidered	128
5.4	Concluding comments on chapters 4 and 5	132
6	Empirical Relevance	139
6.1	Corporatism, centralized bargaining and economic outcomes: comments on comparative studies	139
6.2	Societal bargaining in three countries: Sweden, Austria and the Netherlands	153
6.2.1	Netherlands	156
6.2.2	Austria	163
6.2.3	Sweden	171
6.3	Concluding comments	181
Appendix		185
	List of used symbols	195
	References	197
	Summary	211