Contents

Acknowledgements vi
Abbreviations vii
Introduction 1

PART I  ISSUES OF TASTE 5

1  Consumption, Taste and Social Change 7
   1.1 Sociology and consumption 7
   1.2 Consumption: from habitus to freedom 8
   1.3 Social forces and the transformation of distinction 11
   1.4 Explanations of changing consumption 14
   1.5 The complexity of consumption 18
   1.6 Conclusion 21

2  The New Manners of Food: Trends and their Sociological Interpretation 22
   2.1 The sociology of food 22
   2.2 Diminishing contrasts and increasing variation: Mennell's projection 24
   2.3 Four sociological theses on changing food habits 29
   2.4 Conclusion 41

3  Measuring Change in Taste 43
   3.1 Introduction 43
   3.2 Representations of food: the contents of women's magazines 44
   3.3 Household food expenditure 49
   3.4 Household arrangements and eating: a survey in Greater Manchester 51

PART II  INDICATORS OF TASTE: CHANGING FOOD HABITS 55

4  Novelty and Tradition 57
   4.1 Change and continuity in the British diet 57
Contents

4.2 Novelty
4.3 Tradition
4.4 The antinomy dissected: the ambivalence of modernity
4.5 Novelty, custom and generation
4.6 Summary

5 Health and Indulgence
5.1 Disciplining the body and pampering the soul
5.2 Health in the recipe columns
5.3 Policies for health
5.4 Bodies and weight control: discipline and choice
5.5 Indulgence
5.6 The bodily condition
5.7 Summary

6 Economy and Extravagance
6.1 Material resources
6.2 Income and food consumption
6.3 Class differences over time
6.4 The middle class and distinction
6.5 Lifestyle and class
6.6 Summary

7 Convenience and Care
7.1 Commodification: production and consumption
7.2 Convenience or care: advertising the antinomy
7.3 Convenience and care in the magazines
7.4 Domestic divisions of labour
7.5 Intensification, commodification and domestic life
7.6 Summary

PART III INTERPRETATIONS OF TASTE

8 The Reconstruction of Taste
8.1 Thematic trends in representation
8.2 Trends and official statistics
8.3 Increased variety and diminishing contrasts?
8.4 Antinomies and the structural anxieties of late modernity
8.5 Conclusion: practice and representation

9 Theories of Consumption and the Case of Food
9.1 The specialness of food
9.2 Food trends and tendencies in consumption: undistinguished difference? 181
9.3 Food and theories of consumption 188
9.4 Variety and commodification 190
9.5 Towards a sociological analysis of consumption 196
9.6 In conclusion 203

Notes 205

Appendix: Technical Details about Methodology 210

Magazines 210
The Family Expenditure Survey and discriminant analysis 213
Greater Manchester survey, 1990 217

References 221

Index 227