

---

Contents

List of boxes, figures and tables	x
Boxes	x
Figures	xii
Tables	xii
Abbreviations	xiv
Acknowledgements	xv
Preface	xvii
1 Diversity in the organization of employment: an introduction to the subject	1
Why employment matters	2
Introducing national differences	5
The organization of employment: some national comparative case studies	6
Skills and work organization	8
Pay systems	12
Working time	16
Downsizing and retirement	18
Employee involvement	22
Conclusions	25
2 Making sense of international differences: some methodological approaches	26
Explaining international differences in the organization of employment	26
The universalists	28
The culturalists	32
The institutionalists	37

Developing the societal effect approach	39
Societal effect theory and the role of individual nation states in the world economy	40
Is the nation state the appropriate level or unit of analysis?	42
Does the societal effect approach place too much emphasis on coherence and consensus and too little on conflict and inconsistency?	42
Towards a more dynamic framework	43
3 The development of employment and production regimes	51
Employment and production regimes	51
From Fordist to post-Fordist production regimes	53
Societal systems and production regimes	56
Four production models explored	58
Japanese lean production	58
German diversified quality production	62
Italian flexible specialization	64
Swedish socio-technical systems	68
Borrowing and learning from other societies' production regimes?	70
Conclusions	75
4 The state, the family and gender: from domestic work to wage employment	77
Employment: how much and who does it?	78
Overview	78
Age of entry into employment	80
Impact of marriage and motherhood	80
Retirement	80
Change and continuity	81
Differences in patterns of labour demand and supply: the role of welfare regimes?	84
Overview	84
Some typologies of regimes	85
Employment systems and welfare regimes	92
Job structures	92
Care arrangements and employment	96
Pension systems and employment	98
Gender regimes and employment systems	99
Overview	99
Gender, flexibility and part-time work	100
Gender and employment: a force for convergence?	103

5	Skilling the labour force	106
	Education, skills and productivity	107
	Occupational and internal labour markets	109
	National systems of vocational training	111
	The US: a market-led, weak ILM approach	112
	The UK: a market-led, weak ILM/weak OLM approach	114
	Japan: a firm-based, consensual ILM approach	117
	Germany: an economy-wide, consensual OLM approach	120
	France: a state-led, ILM approach	122
	The performance of countries' training systems assessed	124
	Training coverage and long term skill development	124
	The school-to-work transition	126
	Pressures for change	129
	Technical change	129
	Flexibilization of the labour market	132
	Unemployment	132
	Globalization	133
	Conclusions	137
6	Labour market flexibility and labour market regulation	138
	What is meant by labour market flexibility?	138
	Comparing labour market performance	142
	Understanding labour market regulation: the role of labour market actors	147
	Overview	147
	The UK	149
	Germany	151
	France	152
	Italy	154
	The US	155
	Japan	156
	Country mixes of labour market regulation	157
	Works councils	157
	Wage setting	160
	Employment protection	164
	Working time regulation	167
	Convergence or divergence in national regulatory systems?	170
7	Employment policy and practice: implementation at the workplace	175
	The division of labour	177
	Payment systems	181

Job security and redundancy measures	184
Working time	191
Annualized hours	192
Short-time working	194
Part-time work	195
Increasing unsocial hours working	196
Conclusions	197
8 Multinationals and the organization of employment	198
Multinationals and the survival of nationally-specific employment regimes	198
Multinationals as the agents of diffusion of 'best practice'	199
Typologies of MNCs	201
Types of MNCs and international management	205
Employment policies and practices for non-management staff in MNCs	208
Modes of diffusion of best practice	211
Local versus corporate or global influences: some conclusions	217
Summary and conclusions	220
9 Globalization and the future for diversity	222
Globalization: towards the convergence of employment systems?	222
Is globalization here, and is its progress inevitable?	224
Human resources and comparative advantage in a global market	227
Towards convergence in employment systems?	231
The new production paradigm: towards lean production or global Japanization?	233
The stability of national employment regimes	233
Pan-national governance	234
Global ideology and societal fragmentation?	235
Resistance to globalization?	239
10 Labour regulation in a global economy	241
Why international labour standards?	242
Establishing international labour standards: the main actors	246
From international to regional labour standards	248
Labour standards and the European Union	249
North American Free Trade Association	254

Alternative methods of enforcing labour standards: consumer boycotts, social labelling and trade union negotiated codes of conduct	255
The way forward	259
Bibliography	261
Index of names	285
Subject index	290

---

List of boxes, figures and tables

Boxes

1.1	The nature of the employment contract	3
1.2	Player manager or coordinator: engineers in Japan and the UK	9
1.3	The basis for authority of the foreman: technical competence or ability to give orders?	11
1.4	Pay variations by lifecycle or by job category?	13
1.5	Different job grading principles affect the structure and form of the gender pay gap	14
1.6	The role of part-time work in the integration of women into employment depends on the gender order	17
1.7	Part-time work is women's work in both the Netherlands and Britain, but the penalties for working part-time are higher in Britain	17
1.8	Employers face different restrictions on their rights to lay off workers without consultation	19
1.9	Exit means exit in some societies; in others work and partial retirement are combined	20
1.10	Is worker participation a means to pursue common interests or does it compromise the class struggle?	22
2.1	Hofstede's analysis of culture	34
2.2	On redundant capacities	39
3.1	Taylorism and scientific management in America	53
3.2	The rise of lean production	55
3.3	Japanese lean production	58
3.4	German diversified quality production	62
3.5	Italian industrial districts as an example of flexible specialization	64

3.6	Competition and cooperation in Italian industrial districts	66
3.7	Silicon Valley	67
3.8	The Swedish socio-technical system	68
3.9	Teamworking in the car industry	69
3.10	Global Japanization?	72
3.11	The new British flexible manufacturing firm	74
4.1	Commodification and de-commodification of labour	87
4.2	The American system of welfare — Aid to Families with Dependent Children — is reformed under Clinton	91
5.1	Who gets formal training in the US?	113
5.2	Local reform to the rescue? New models of US training provision	114
5.3	The low skill bias of UK institutions	115
5.4	Modern Apprenticeships in Britain: why a revival of occupational labour markets may be prevented by market failure and missing institutional links	116
5.5	Lifetime commitment in the Japanese firm	118
5.6	On-the-job training in the Japanese firm	119
5.7	The Dual System: the lynchpin of German skill provision	120
5.8	Vocational training in France	122
5.9	'Pay-or-play': the French training levy system	124
5.10	Adapt or perish: the German Dual System versus the challenge of new information technologies	130
5.11	The German training system in crisis?	134
5.12	Core-periphery work in the Japanese employment system	136
6.1	Indicators of labour market flexibility	139
6.2	The jobs versus equality trade-off?	145
6.3	Voluntaristic traditions in British industrial relations	150
6.4	German industrial relations: the case of free collective bargaining through juridification	151
6.5	French unions and the class struggle	153
6.6	Business unionism in the US: industrial relations in the margins?	155
6.7	The company union in Japan	156
7.1	The challenges of cross-national research: the contributions of 'societal analysis'	176
7.2	Downsizing in the US	185
7.3	Innovative policies to prevent redundancy	188
7.4	Managing redundancies in the UK: the case of forced voluntary redundancy	191
7.5	Annualized hours in the UK: problems of control and compensation	193
7.6	Part-time work in banking: some societal effects	195
8.1	Characteristics of an heterarchical firm	205

8.2	Multinational enterprises as structures of power	214
8.3	Expectations of local influence by area of employment policy	216
9.1	Examples of developments which may be challenging or destabilizing societal systems	234
10.1	ILO Declaration of Philadelphia, 1944	246
10.2	International Labour Organization Declaration on Fundamental Principles and Rights at Work, 1998	247
10.3	Code of Labour Practice for Production of Goods Licensed by the Fédération Internationale de Football Associations (FIFA)	256

Figures

1.1	Contradictory pressures on employment policy and practice	4
1.2	Ratio of chief executive pay to manufacturing workers' pay in advanced countries	13
2.1	International pressures on societal systems	47
4.1	Employment and activity rates in OECD countries 2000	78
4.2	Employment rates for men and women in OECD countries 2000	79
4.3	Changes in employment rates for older aged men	82
4.4	Gender gap in prime age employment rates	82
4.5	Employment rates for women by level of educational attainment in OECD countries 1999	104
5.1	Categorizing national systems of vocational training	112
6.1	Employment in the US, Japan and the EU	142
6.2	Unemployment in the US, Japan and the EU	143
6.3	Wage inequality in OECD countries 1980–1995	144
6.4	Trade union density 1970–1995	153
8.1	Varieties of isomorphism: local, corporate, cross national and global influences on subsidiaries of multinationals	210

Tables

2.1	Frameworks for comparative research: universalists, culturalists, institutionalists and related schools of thought	27
2.2	Bundles of high performance management practices	32
3.1	Varieties of flexible production	57
4.1	Length of transition from school to work	80
4.2	Effective retirement ages of males 1970 and 1990	81
4.3	Rates of incarceration and victimization	83

4.4	The three worlds of welfare capitalism	86
4.5	Strong, modified, or weak male breadwinner welfare states	90
4.6	Post-industrial employment trajectories in Germany, Sweden and the US, mid-1980s	93
4.7	Poverty rates for various household types, working age population	94
4.8	Classification of European countries by provision of services for elderly and children	96
4.9	Activity patterns of mothers in the EU	102
5.1	Comparing occupational and internal labour market systems	110
5.2	Apprenticeships in Germany	121
6.1	Summary of characteristics of employer and trade union associations (1990s)	149
6.2	Works councils in Europe	159
6.3	Characteristics of country systems of wage-setting	161
6.4	Summary of minimum wage systems in selected countries	164
6.5	Characteristics of employment protection in selected countries	166
6.6	Characteristics of working time regulation in selected countries	169
7.1	Division of labour in manufacturing companies in five countries	178
7.2	Payment systems in five countries	182
7.3	Flexible employment to minimize redundancies	187
8.1	Comparison of typologies of MNCs	204
8.2	Macro-environmental influences on human resource practices of MNCs	218
9.1	Growth of foreign direct investment	223
9.2	Trends in marriage and fertility	238
9.3	Living patterns and family status of young people aged 20–29 in Southern versus Northern European countries	239
10.1	Arguments for labour standards	243
10.2	Types of labour standards	245
10.3	Arguments for and against a social clause in world trade agreements	248
10.4	Labour standards established by the European Union	252