

---

List of boxes	vi
Foreword	vii
Acknowledgements	ix
Introduction: doing research projects in marketing, management and consumer research	1
1 Interpretive perspectives and the independent research project	3
2 Choosing the topic	26
3 'Writing up' the research project	48
4 Gathering qualitative data for interpretation	70
5 Major themes and concepts of interpretive research	90
6 Phenomenology	111
7 Ethnography	127
8 Critical research and critical discourse analysis	142
9 Semiotics in marketing and consumer research	161
10 Other approaches: literary theory and narrative analysis, feminism and gender studies, postmodernism and poststructuralism	177
Appendix: what is a 'good' academic journal?	194
References	196
Index	206

---

1.1	Some general topic areas that can be researched using the approaches in this book	6-7
1.2	Reasons for not moving to a quantitative phase in a research project	13
1.3	Reasons for conducting an exploratory research project to satisfy taught degree criteria	14
1.4	Examples of some of the interdependent skills required to successfully complete academic research projects in management and marketing	17
2.1	Research project proposal checklist	32
2.2	Checklist for choosing a project topic	41
3.1	A suggested empirical research project chapter order	53
3.2	A suggested conceptual research project chapter order	54
3.3	Chapter one suggested content	55
3.4	A suggested schema of levels of critical thinking	59
4.1	Research interviewing checklist	77
4.2	Focus/discussion group principles	81
5.1	The role a theoretical perspective plays in 'pulling a research project together'	93
6.1	Major features of phenomenological/existential research	113
7.1	Major features of ethnographic research	132
8.1	Major features of critical research	146
8.2	Major features of critical discourse analysis	155
9.1	Major features of semiotic analysis	172
9.2	An approach to semiotic deconstruction	173