WATSONIAN BEHAVIORISM
Edward K. Morris and James T. Todd

I. Introduction 16
II. Intellectual, Cultural, and Individual Context 18
CONTENTS

A. Intellectual Context: Philosophy, Science, and Psychology 18
B. Cultural and Individual Context 22

III. Before Watsonian Behaviorism 25
A. Watson’s Research Programs 26
B. Watson and Psychology in 1913 29

IV. Watsonian Behaviorism 30
A. Watson: 1913–1920 30
B. The Behaviorist Manifesto 32
C. “Psychology as the Behaviorist Views It” 32
D. A Science of Behavior 45

V. After Watsonian Behaviorism 49
A. Watson: 1920–1936 49
B. Heredity and Environment 50
C. Applications to Child Rearing and Advertising 53
D. Watson: 1936–1958 56

VI. Conclusion 57
References 59

INTERBEHAVIORISM AND INTERBEHAVIORAL PSYCHOLOGY

LINDA J. HAYES AND DEBRA W. FREDERICKS

I. Historical Background 73
A. Biography 73
B. The Evolution of Organismic Psychology 76

II. Ziggurat of Science and Civilization 77
A. Cultural Matrix 77
B. Protopostulates of Scientific Philosophy 78
C. Metasystem of the Sciences 80
D. Postulates of the Individual Sciences 81

III. Postulational System of Interbehavioral Psychology 81
A. Interbehavioral Fields as Subject Matter 81
B. Factors Participating in Interbehavioral Fields 81

IV. Psychological Events 83
A. General Classes of Interbehavior 83
B. Varieties of Psychological Events 85

V. Interbehaviorism and Radical Behaviorism 86
A. Similarities 86
B. Differences 87

VI. Relation to Empirical Evidence 89
Contents

| A. Kantor's Contributions to Empirical Research | 90 |
| B. Others' Assessment of Kantor's Contributions | 91 |
| C. Sphere of Influence | 91 |
| D. Domains of Influence | 91 |
| VII. Current Status and Future Directions | 92 |
| VIII. Epilogue | 93 |
| References | 93 |

Edward C. Tolman's Purposive Behaviorism

Nancy K. Innis

I. Purposive Behaviorism 99
   A. A New Formula for Behaviorism 99
   B. Purposive Behavior in Animals and Men 101

II. Operational Behaviorism 103

III. Performance Vectors 106
   A. The Schematic Sowbug 106
   B. Failure of the Schematic Sowbug 109

IV. From Rats and Sowbugs to Man 109

V. A Field Theory of Learning 110
   A. Cognitive Maps in Rats and Men 111
   B. Tolman's Map Analogy 112

VI. The Psychology of Social Learning 113

VII. Edward Tolman: Purposive Behaviorist 115

Clark L. Hull's Behaviorism

Michael E. Rashotte and Abram Amsel

Introduction 120
Brief Biographical Sketch 120
I. Theoretical Style 122
   A. Influence of Machines 122
B. Plan for Developing a Behavior Theory 123
C. Perspective on Hull’s Attempt to Make a Formal Behavior Theory 126
D. Physiology and Hull–Spence Theory 127

II. S–R Analysis of Cognitive Processes 129
A. Knowledge, Foresight, Directing Ideas, and Purpose 129
B. Gestalt Phenomena 136
C. Habit–Family Hierarchies (Networks of Associations) 136
D. Kenneth Spence’s Analysis of Transposition 138
E. Application to Psychotherapy and Symbolic Processes 141

III. Conceptualizations of Reinforcement and Reward: Evolution of Hull’s 1943 Theory 142
A. “Reinforcement” in Hull’s 1943 Theory 143
B. Difficulties Recognized by Hull in 1943 144
C. The Elliott–Crespi–Zeaman Experiment 145
D. Spence’s Contributions to Reward–Incentive Theory 147
E. Amsel’s Frustration Theory: A Conditioning Model of Effects of Rewards and Nonreward 150

Concluding Comments 153
Acknowledgments 154

Radical Behaviorism: B.F. Skinner’s Philosophy of Science
Jon Ringen

I. Radical Behaviorism as Philosophy of Science 160
II. Radical Behaviorism: The Basic Issues 161
III. Radical Behaviorism and Mentalism 162
A. Privacy 162
B. Intentionality 164
IV. Radical Behaviorism and Knowledge 170
A. “Thinking” “Impossible” “Thoughts”? 171
B. Naturalism and “Knowledge”? 175
V. Summary 176

BIOLOGICAL BEHAVIORISM
WILLIAM TIMBERLAKE

I. Introduction 244
   A. The Waning Hegemony of Traditional Behaviorism 244
   B. Biological Behaviorism: An Inclusive Approach 245
   C. Chapter Preview 245

II. A Brief History of the Study of Behavior 246
   A. Observation and Anthropomorphism 246
   B. Training and Implicit Causal Models 247
   C. Experimental Tests of Causation 248

III. Strengths and Limitations of Manipulation-Centered Behaviorism 249
   A. Strengths of the Manipulation-Centered Approach 250
   B. Limitations of the Manipulation-Centered Approach 251

IV. An Animal-Centered Biological Behaviorism 253
   A. Animal-Centered Versus Anthropomorphic Observation 254
   B. Animal-Centered Manipulations 257
   C. An Animal-Centered Approach to Traditional Experimentation 258
   D. Constructing an Animal-Centered Causal System Model 261

V. The Feeding Behavior System in Rats: A Causal System Model 263
   A. Structure of the Feeding System 264
   B. Regulation of a Behavior System 267
   C. Characteristics of Animal-Centered Causal System Models of Behavior 268
VI. Biological Behaviorism and Nonperipheral Causation  268
   A. Evolution and Development  269
   B. Physiology  270
   C. Intervening Concepts  271
   D. Mental Life  273

FUNCTIONAL CONTEXTUALISM: A PRAGMATIC PHILOSOPHY FOR BEHAVIORAL SCIENCE
ELIZABETH V. GIFFORD AND STEVEN C. HAYES

I. Mechanism and Pragmatism: Basic Definitions  287
   A. Mechanism  287
   B. Historical Traditions in Behaviorism  287
   C. The Core of Pragmatism  288
   D. A Pragmatic Approach to Philosophy of Science  290

II. Philosophical Inconsistency in Skinner’s Writing  291
   A. Dewey’s Functional Definition of the Stimulus and Response  292
   B. The Evolution of the Concept of the Stimulus  293

III. Contextualistic Behaviorism  294
   A. An Interactive, Holistic Unit of Analysis  294
   B. Flexible Units  295
   C. Dynamic Change versus Static Structure  296
   D. Causality and Utility  297
   E. Functional Epistemology  299
   F. Pragmatic Goals of Analysis  300
   G. The Limits of James’s Pragmatism  301
   H. Summary  302

IV. Goals and Contextual Schools  303
   A. Descriptive Contextualism  304
   B. Strengths and Weaknesses  305

V. Functional Contextualism  306
   A. Strengths  307
   B. Scientific Theory  307
   C. Behavior Analytic Rules for Action  308
   D. Integrating Basic and Applied Research  309
   E. Weakness  310
   F. Contextualism and Relativism  310
G. Verbal and Nonverbal Justification 311
H. Summary: Descriptive and Functional Contextualism 313

VI. Implications of Functional Contextualism: Expanding the Analysis of Private Events 313
   A. Public/Private versus Physical/Mental 314
   B. The Scientific Analysis of Private Events 314

VII. Criticisms of Functional Contextualism 316
   A. Contextualism’s Fidelity to its Assumptions and Promiscuity at Other Levels 317
   B. Recent Criticism within Behavior Analysis 318
   C. Functional Contextualism or Pragmatism? 321

VIII. Conclusion 321

Ryle’s Behaviorism
Ullin T. Place

I. Gilbert Ryle 362
II. OUR-Behaviorism versus OR-Behaviorism 362
III. Ryle’s Debt to Wittgenstein 364
   A. Philosophy as Linguistic Clarification 365
   B. Logical Grammar 365
   C. Ordinary Language 366
   D. Dispositions 366
   E. Aspect and Ontology 367
   F. Reasons and Causes 368

IV. What is in Wittgenstein, But Not in Ryle 369
   A. Language Games 369
   B. Linguistic Rules 369

V. Ryle’s Innovations: The Failures 370
   A. “The Ghost in the Machine” 370
   B. Categories, Category Differences, and Category Mistakes 371
   C. “Knowing How” and “Knowing That” 373

VI. Ryle’s Innovations: The Achievements 374
   A. Restricting Conceptual Analysis to On-Duty Sentences 374
   B. The Method of Verification as a Clue to Meaning 376
   C. The Hypothetical Analysis of Dispositional Statements 378
   D. A Comprehensive Survey of Commonsense Psychology 379
   E. Most, But Not All, Ordinary Psychological Concepts are Dispositional 379

VII. Ryle’s Critics 380
   A. Place (1954) 381
   B. Geach (1957) 383
   C. Medlin (1967) 386
   D. Armstrong (1968) 391
