E-learning and teaching in library and information services

Barbara Allan
Contents

List of tables  ix

List of figures  xi

Acknowledgements  xiii

1 Introduction  1
   Introduction to this book  1
   What is e-learning?  2
   The structure of the book  11

E-learning tools and technologies  17

2 Virtual communication tools  19
   Introduction  19
   E-mails  21
   Mailing lists  24
   Newsgroups  31
   Bulletin boards  33
   Webforms  34
   Polling
   Instant messaging  35
   Chat or conferencing  36
   Internet telephony  41
   Videoconferencing  41
   Virtual worlds  44
   Access to virtual communication tools  44
   Summary  48
7 Successful e-learning 158
   Introduction 158
   Skills required to become an e-learner 159
   Preparing to become an e-learner 160
   Learning to learn and e-learn 160
   E-learning experiences 167
   Practical advice to new e-learners 172
   Summary 172

8 Design of e-learning programmes and activities 173
   Introduction 173
   The design and development cycle 174
   Needs analysis 175
   Design 184
   Development 185
   Delivery 199
   Evaluation 200
   Summary 206

9 E-learning activities 207
   Introduction 207
   E-learning activities and exercises 207
   Specific examples of e-learning activities 209
   Assessment activities 235
   Summary 243

E-learning and the LIS profession 245

10 Implications of e-learning and teaching 247
   Introduction 247
   Implications for individual library and information workers 247
   Implications for library and information units 250
   Implications for the profession 251
   Final comments 253
E-learning and teaching in library and information services

11 Resources 254
   Introduction 254
   Books 254
   E-journals 255
   Websites 255

References 261

Index 269