CONTENTS

Acknowledgments ix
Introduction xi

PART I
MEMOIRS AND DIARIES PUBLISHED AT THE END OF THE SOVIET EPOCH: AN OVERVIEW

Publishers, Authors, Texts, Reader, Corpus 1

The Background: Memoir Writing and Historical Consciousness 9

Connecting the “I” and History 15

Revealing the Intimate 17

Building a Community 24

Moving in with a New Text | Joining the Ranks of Victims | Remembering
Stalin: Tears | Disagreeing | Family Memoirs | Two Memoirs and a Novel Tell
the Same Story | Generalizations: Soviet Memoirs as a Communal Apartment

Writing at the End 41

The Archive and the Apocalypse | The End of the Intelligentsia

Qualification: The “I” in Quotation Marks 49

Excursus: Readers Respond in LiveJournal 51

Concluding Remarks 55

PART II
TWO TEXTS: CLOSE READINGS 57

1. Lidiia Chukovskaia’s Diary of Anna Akhmatova’s Life:
"Intimacy and Terror" 59

The Years of Terror: In “the Torture Chamber” 62
Family and Home: “The Cesspit of a Communal Apartment” 66
Overview of Circumstances | The Apartment in Poems and Dreams | “To Have Dinner at the Same Table as Her Husband’s Wife” | How Akhmatova Left Punin | Generalizations: The Soviet State, Domestic Space, and Intimacy

During the War 77
Poverty and Squalor: New Living Forms and New Insight | The Helplessness and the Power | Gossip | Hardships and Privileges
“A New Epoch Began”: After 1953 95
Did They Understand What Was Going On? | Akhmatova’s Things and Manuscripts | An Aside: Memoirs as Historical Evidence | Historical Continuity: The 1930s and the 1960s | “Same Time, Same Facts, Different Memories”
Concluding Vignette: “She’ll Tell You What 1937 Was Like” 115

2. The Notebooks of the Peasant Evgeniia Kiseleva: “The War Separated Us Forever” 118

Notebook 1: “The Story of My Life” 120
The Separation and the War | The Second Marriage | After the Second Marriage | Here and Now

Notebooks 2 and 3 134
Memory and Narrative | Television and Emotion | Television and Apocalypsis | A Comment on Historical Continuity: The Past War and the Future War | Generalizations: The Soviet State in the Domestic Space | Citizens and Power | The End: “We Live Like Strangers”

How These Notebooks Reached the Reader: The Interpreters 150
Defining the Status of the Text: “Naive Writing” | The Competition between Publishers: “Legislators and Interpreters” | The Disappearance of the Author | “Person without Subj ecthood”
Concluding Remarks 159

PART III
DREAMS OF TERROR: INTERPRETATIONS 161

Comments on Dreams as Stories and as Sources 161
Andrei Arzhilovsky: The Peasant Raped by Stalin 166
Nikolai Bukharin Dreams of Stalin: Abraham and Isaac 171
Writers’ Dreams: Mikhail Prishvin 172
Writers’ Dreams: Veniamin Kaverin 182
The Dreams of Anna Akhmatova 187
A Comment on Writers’ and Peasants’ Theories of Dreams 194
<table>
<thead>
<tr>
<th>CONTENTS</th>
<th></th>
</tr>
</thead>
<tbody>
<tr>
<td>A Philosopher’s Dreams: Yakov Druskin</td>
<td>197</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Stalin’s Dream</td>
<td>203</td>
</tr>
<tr>
<td>Concluding Remarks</td>
<td>205</td>
</tr>
</tbody>
</table>

CONCLUSION
209
EPILOGUE
211

Appendix: Russian Texts  213
Notes  259
Index  279