

ACHILLES IN VIETNAM

Combat Trauma
and the Undoing of Character

Jonathan Shay, M.D., Ph.D.

SCRIBNER

New York London Toronto Sydney

CONTENTS

Acknowledgments	xi
Author's Caution to Veterans, Their Families, and Their Friends	xii
Introduction	xiii

PART I

1. Betrayal of "What's Right"	3
An army is a moral construction	5
Victory, defeat, and the hovering dead	6
Some veterans' view—What is defeat? What is victory?	7
Dimensions of betrayal of "what's right"	9
On danger in war	9
The fairness assumption	10
The fiduciary assumption	14
Soldiers' rage—The beginning	20
2. Shrinkage of the Social and Moral Horizon	23
One American soldier's social space	23
Tracking Achilles through social space	24
Desertion	26
Simplification of the social world to a single comrade	28
Achilles' character before his psychological injuries	28
Respect for the dead	29
Taking prisoners alive	29
Moral luck	30
War destroys the trustworthy social order of the mind	32
Combat is a condition of captivity and enslavement	35
"Don't mean nothin'" —Destruction of ideals, ambitions, affiliations	37
3. Grief at the Death of a Special Comrade	39
Soldiers' love for special comrades—Vietnam and Troy	40
Homer on the relationship between Achilles and Pátroklos	41
The specialness of the special comrade	43
Portrait of Pátroklos	44

CONTENTS

The grief of Achilles	49
Being already dead	51
Grief and the warrior's rage	53
Communalization of grief in the Iliad and in Vietnam	55
When were the dead brought to the rear?	57
Who brought the dead to the rear?	58
When were the dead mourned?	59
What was the level of trust, safety, and social cohesiveness in the rear during mourning?	60
Use of mind-altering substances	62
Who wept for the dead, and how were tears valued?	63
Who washed and prepared the dead for cremation/burial and shipment home?	65
The importance of thwarted grief	67
4. Guilt and Wrongful Substitution	69
Abandonment and wrongful substitution	69
Deserving the death sentence	72
Homecoming renounced	73
An unintended outcome of religious education?	74
Soldier's rage—Fatal convergence and completion	75
5. Berserk	77
Triggers of the berserk state	77
"Don't get sad. Get even!"	81
Characteristics of the berserk state	81
A beast	82
A god	84
Above and beneath—Disconnection from human community	86
Loss of all restraint	86
Revenge as reviving the dead	89
The berserker in the eyes of other soldiers	90
Flaming ice—Berserk physiology	91
Aristelai of American soldiers in Vietnam—The differences	94
Naked berserkers and Achilles' invulnerability	97
Clinical importance of the berserk state	98

PART II

5. Dishonoring the Enemy	103
The enemy as enemy: Images in common to Vietnam and Troy	104
Image of the Vietnamese enemy	105

CONTENTS

Homer: Valor does not depend on contempt for the enemy	106
Enemy soldiers talk to each other at Troy	107
Soldiers talk about the enemy at Troy	109
Religious roots of the enemy as vermin: Biblical anti-epic in 1 Samuel 17	111
Clinical importance of honoring or dishonoring the enemy	115
Abuse of the dead enemy	117
7. What Homer Left Out	121
Deprivation	121
Friendly fire	124
Fragging	125
Suffering of the wounded	127
Civilian suffering	129
Suffered by all civilians during war	129
Suffered exclusively or primarily by women after defeat	133
8. Soldiers' Luck and God's Will	137
The social spectrum of luck	137
Equipment failure	141
Attributing blame	144
Job's paradox and the possibility of virtue	147
9. Reclaiming the Iliad's Gods as a Metaphor of Social Power	149
Armies as creators of social power	150
Gods as REMFs	154
Heartlessness of the gods	154
Readiness to "waste" lives	155
Sunk-costs argument	157
Sinister demographic agendas	158
The gods as inconsistent, unreliable, inattentive, distractible	159
Homeric irony and god's love	160

PART III

10. The Breaking Points of Moral Existence— What Breaks?	165
The official diagnostic criteria for PTSD of the American Psychiatric Association	166
PTSD and the ruins of character	169

CONTENTS

Persistence of the traumatic moment—Loss of authority over mental function	170
Untrustworthiness of perception	170
Memory	172
Persistent mobilization for danger	173
Persistence of survival skills	175
Persistence of betrayal	178
Persistence of isolation	179
Persistence of suicidality	179
Persistence of meaninglessness	180
Destruction of the capacity for democratic participation	180
II. Healing and Tragedy	183
Is recovery possible?	184
Return to "normal" is not possible	184
We don't know if recovery is possible	185
Yes—Recovery is possible	186
What is the best treatment?	187
Why and how does narrative heal?	188
The law of forgetting and denial	193
Conclusion	195
Prevention	196
Protect unit cohesion by unit rather than individual rotation	198
Value griefwork	198
Do not encourage berserking	200
Eliminate intentional injustice as a motivational technique	201
Respect the enemy as human	202
Acknowledge psychiatric casualties	203
War is not an industrial process	204
Pissing contests	205
Species ethic	206
Notes	211
Bibliography	233
Index	237