Words for Feelings

Studies in the History of the English Emotion Lexicon
Contents

Foreword, Acknowledgements 7

Part I: General considerations
1. Emotions: what they are, and why language historians should care 13
2. Pragmatic aspects of the psychological experiment 65
3. Historical Semantics, corpora, and the unity of English Studies 77
4. “Cultural” vs. “historical” explanation: the case of the English emotion lexicon 97

Part II: Growth of Semantic Fields
5. Measuring the growth of semantic fields: the case of the English emotion lexicon 107
6. Contempt: the main growth area in the Elizabethan emotion lexicon 119

Part III: Exemplary Word Studies:
IIIA: Mōd / Mood & Co.
7. European concepts and English words: the case of Old English mōd 135
8. Old English mōdig: Cognitive Semantics and cultural contact 149
9. Discourse, matrix and genre in Historical Semantics: OE ofermōd (and ModE emotion) 159
10. The decline of the family of mōd: ICAMET and other corpora 167
11. Mood in Middle English 181
12. Medieval “with a mood” and modern “in a mood”: changing a metaphor we live by 191
13. Mood in Renaissance poetry – and in “Google Books” 201

IIIB: Wrath, Anger & Co.
14. ANGER and TĒNE in Middle English 219
15. Ssoong on Ifaluk, ANGER and WRATH in Middle English: Historical Semantics as bridge-builder 233
16. Wrath and anger in the time of Shakespeare 249
17. Culturomics and genre: wrath and anger in the 17th century 261
IIIC: Positive Emotions

18. Why JOY? Was BLISS not good enough? 271
19. JOY and MIRTH in Middle English (and a little bit in Old): a plea for the consideration of genre in Historical Semantics 279
20. Happy in changing contexts: The history of word-use and the metamorphoses of a concept 295

Part IV: The Demise and Emergence of Superordinate Categories

21. 'Emotion' in Old English – a lexical gap? 319
22. Affection, passion, feeling, stirring: towards a pre-history of the category 'emotion' 331
23. Chaucer's emotion lexicon 337
24. From möd to emotion (or almost): the medieval gestation of a modern concept 351
25. Emotion vs. Passion: the history of word-use and the emergence of an a-moral category 371

Afterword: Historical Semantics and the rest of English Studies 393

26. References 395

Subject Index 435
Index of authors and anonymous works 441