Donald R. Kelley

The Writing of History and the Study of Law

VARIORUM
1997
CONTENTS

Introduction vii–viii

Acknowledgements ix

PART ONE: EARLY MODERN HISTORY

I Humanism and History 236–270

II Tacitus Noster. The Germania in the Renaissance and Reformation 152–167

III Johann Sleidan and the Origins of History as a Profession 573–598
Journal of Modern History 52. Chicago, 1980

IV History as a Calling: The Case of La Popelinière 773–789

V Martyrs, Myths, and the Massacre: The Background of St Bartholomew 1323–1342
American Historical Review 77, no. 5. Washington, 1972

VI History and the Encyclopedia 7–22
PART TWO: MODERN HISTORY

VII Ancient Verses on New Ideas: Legal Tradition and the French Historical School 319–338
History and Theory 26, no. 3. Middletown, CT, 1987

VIII Mythistory in the Age of Ranke 3–20

IX Robert Flint, Historian of Ideas 39–62
Storia della Storiografia 27. Turin, 1995

X The Science of Anthropology: An Essay on the Very Old Marx 245–262

PART THREE: HISTORY AND THE LAW

XI "Second Nature": The Idea of Custom in European Law, Society, and Culture 131–172

XII Civil Science in the Renaissance: The Problem of Interpretation 57–78

XIII Jurisconsultus Perfectus: The Lawyer as Renaissance Man 84–102

XIV Men of Law and the French Revolution 127–146

Index 1–10

This volume contains x + 348 pages