

THEORETICAL CRIMINOLOGY: from modernity
to post-modernism

Wayne Morrison, LLB, LLM, PhD,
Barrister and Solicitor (New Zealand)
Lecturer in Law
Queen Mary & Westfield College

Cavendish
Publishing
Limited

---

CONTENTS

THE NATURE OF RIGHTS AND LIBERTIES

Acknowledgements	ii
Preface	iii
1 NARRATING THE MOOD OF THE TIMES: CONFUSION, SELF-DOUBT, AND AMBIVALENCE	1
Finding places, finding time, finding beginnings ...	1
Journeys, snippets ... modernisations	2
The problem of the modern world	4
Reflexivity, and the principle of the recognisability of the world	6
The subject matter of criminology is inherently contestable	6
How is criminology presented? How are criminological texts structured?	7
Classicism	8
Positivism in the 19th century	8
In the early development of positivism, crime was viewed as a natural problem to be cured, similar to a disease	9
A crucial area of conflict has been, to what does the concept of crime refer to?	10
A period of contextualising of criminology occurred in the 1960s and 1970s	11
The consensus or functionalist model	13
The pluralist model	13
The conflict model	14
The meaning of the central concepts of criminology varies according to your scientific perspective	14
Contemporary criminology has different perspectives on central issues	15
Post-modernism and the acceptance of language games as the reality of social life	15
Living, and making sense of life, within multiple perspectives is the problem of the post-modern condition	16
But if there is not any natural crime how can criminology have a basic phenomena to investigate?	17
Because we are trapped in the circles of social processes does not condemn criminology to mindless relativism, nor should it amount to a surrender of modernity to the forces of the pre-modern masquerading in the guise of a return to basics	18
The current position: etiological scepticism and conservative responses	18
The final (conservative?) position: the concept of the self and self-control as the bed-rock for founding a general theory of crime	20
Interactionism as a theme for a general theory	22
The possibility of a criminology of modernity?	23
2 THE PROBLEM OF MODERNITY	25
The concept of modernity	25
Modernity and control	28
Modernity and civilisation	28
Modernity as the product of a transformation	29

Contents

---

Modern social life as a normative project	29
The twin stages of modernity	29
Is modernity exhausted? Has it lost its force?	32
Post-modernity, or the realisation of the impossibility of fulfilling modernity?	33
The strains of modernity contained within the discourse of emancipation	35
The need for empirical analysis of the reality of the socio-political location of individuals and groups	35
The discourse of liberation and authenticity impact upon the modern self	36
Criminology and the social structure of modernity	37
The role of liberalism in the constitution of modernity	39
3 THE THEORISTS OF MODERNITY: AN INTRODUCTION TO MAX WEBER, KARL MARX, EMILE DURKHEIM AND FREIDRICH NIETZSCHE	41
Max Weber and the rationalisation of the world	41
The nation state and the rise of capitalism	42
The mood of Weber	44
The problem of discipline	45
Karl Marx	45
Jurisprudence is not to be trusted	48
What is the real basis of the law?	49
Policing becomes a core concern of capitalist social structure	50
What is required to escape? To achieve true emancipation?	50
What happened? What was the effect of Marx's writings?	51
Emile Durkheim (1858-1917)	54
Sociological positivism	55
Social solidarity	55
The use of law as an index of social solidarity	56
Crime is normal in a society	57
Durkheim and the openness of human nature	57
The notion of anomie	58
Durkheim's analysis of suicide as the paradigm example of positivism and statistics	59
Friedrich Nietzsche (1844-1900)	60
Man's intellectual frameworks were not modern enough	61
The paradox of the whole and the parts	61
The danger of nihilism	61
The legacy of Weber and Nietzsche in the work of Foucault	63
Culture and knowledge largely constitute the conditions of the modern	63
The void underlying modern existence	64
The created nature of modern man	65

4	THE PROBLEM OF CLASSICAL CRIMINOLOGY: STABILISING DISORDER THROUGH LAW; OR HOW TO ACHIEVE THE RULE OF LAW AND HIDE THE CHAOS OF EARLY MODERNITY	71
	Introduction to classical criminology	71
	The problem of God's death resolved into the core of the one	72
	Beccaria (1738-1794)	72
	Jeremy Bentham (1748-1832)	74
	Understanding classical criminology and its continuing appeal	76
	The rule of law as an expression of current features of modernity	77
	A basic question: how is legitimacy of criminal justice established?	78
	Classical criminology destroys the magical irrationality of the pre-modern	79
	The legitimization of decisions in the theological system depended on an overall synthesis	80
	What does this foundation of mystery entail?	82
	How is modern society made if not as a reflection of underlying natural laws of social evolution?	83
	Classical criminology talks the language of a 'true' science of man and society, but actually creates a structure separate from nature; it founds the social upon myth and politics	86
	The need for objectivity and professionalism	87
	What is rational government?	88
	The need to stabilise potential chaos	89
	The results of the constructionist project: the creation of hybrids such as 'rights'	91
5	READING THE TEXTS OF CLASSICAL CRIMINOLOGY: BEYOND MERE COMMAND INTO SYSTEMATIC LEGITIMATION	93
	What is the nature of the criminal justice system?	94
	Reading classicism I: The construction of Beccaria's text	96
	Reading classicism II: John Austin and the role of knowledge	103
	After the destruction of the classicist faith in utility what guides the law?	107
	Jurists hold that legal regulation, by its nature, seems to imply obedience; why?	107
	H L A Hart: the critique of classicism in Austin and the response of the civilised man	107
	Without faith in utilitarianism, and devoid of a natural law system, how can the positive law earn respect?	110
	Conclusion: the dialectic of systems and selves	113
6	CRIMINOLOGICAL POSITIVISM I: THE SEARCH FOR THE CRIMINAL MAN, OR THE PROBLEM OF THE DUCK	115
	Introduction to criminological positivism	115
	Intellectual revolution or a narrowing of concerns?	117
	Modernity, construction and the social control perspective	121
	Cesare Lombroso (1835-1909)	124
	Raffaele Garofalo (1852-1934)	126
	Enrico Ferri (1856-1929)	126

Early criminological positivism and the rule of law	128
A E Hooton	129
W H Sheldon	130
The legacy of positivism: disentangling the mess	133
7 CRIMINOLOGICAL POSITIVISM II: PSYCHOLOGY AND THE POSITIVISATION OF THE SOUL
Positivism, learning and psychology	139
Bowlby's theory of maternal deprivation and crime	142
Eysenck's theory of crime	144
Edwin Sutherland and the theory of differential association	150
The prevalence of white collar crime demonstrated the normalcy of crime	155
The extreme criminal: the idea of the psychopath	155
The aetiology of psychopathology?	158
If this is not a 'moral disorder' then there must be a treatment?	159
What sort of regimes do the penal systems of England, Wales and Scotland use?	160
Evaluation of the treatment effects of Grendon	161
Psychopathology and interactive communication	162
The knowledges of psychology: tools of control in modernity?	163
8 CRIMINOLOGICAL POSITIVISM III: STATISTICS, QUANTIFYING THE MORAL HEALTH OF SOCIETY AND CALCULATING NATURE'S LAWS
'In following attentively the regular march of nature in the development of plants and animals we are compelled to believe in the analogue that the influence of laws should be extended to the human species.' (Quetelet, 1826)	165
The resolution of chance and the chaos of the natural state	165
The battle for sociology: a moral science or a statistical science?	167
Criminal statistics	168
The problem of criminal statistics	168
Problems in the compilation of official statistics	169
Attempts to mitigate the failings of the official statistics	171
The contemporary problem of reflexivity and criminal statistics – do we need a science of interpretation?	173
How did we get to the point where statistics dominate criminological discourse?	174
Strain theory	175
What can we make of this?	180
Social control theory	183
What are we to make of these 'control theories'?	187

9 POSITIVISM AND THE DREAM OF ORGANISED MODERNITY	189
Criminology and the dream of organised modernity	189
Social distance	190
The development of bureaucracy and the knowledges of disciplinisation	193
Governing the population came to mean creating a bourgeois citizenship	197
The dialectics of the civilising process	199
The reflexive questioning of civilisation	202
The impact of crimes of obedience and crimes of bureaucracy	203
The structural features of crimes of obedience	205
Authorisation	207
Routinisation	208
Dehumanisation	208
Alasdair MacIntyre and the critique of managerial expertise	209
Is post-modernism the end of the dream of organised modernity?	210
The post-modern condition: life within the unorganised structures of organised modernity?	211
Social control in post-modernism: the seduced and the repressed	212
10 MORALITY, NORMALCY AND MODERNITY: THE MORAL INTENSITY OF EVERYDAY LIFE	215
Analyticism and the problem of contemporary criminology	215
H L A Hart: everyday life as the site of analysis	218
The complexity of the mundane: the richness of everyday life	219
The narratives of civil society	223
David Hume (1711-1776) and the foundation of experience	223
Immanuel Kant and the need to rely upon pure reason	224
The problematic of being a modern and being moral	228
Durkheim's model of modernity restated	230
The task of moral socialisation in late-modernity: the example of gender relations	232
11 LOCALITY AND CRIMINOLOGY: FROM THE POLIS TO THE POST-MODERN CITY	237
The paradox of city life: social distance, physical proximity	237
Crime links with fear, trust, and predictability	239
Telling the story of urban existence: I, the oral-ethnographic efforts	240
Telling the story of urban existence: II, the ecological paradigm and the attempt to develop a science of the city	243
The Chicago School used a concept of social disorganisation to explain the ecology of crime	246
Understanding urbanity: III, beyond the naturalist paradigm	249
Can cities be controlled so that community can be created as a livable urban space?	251
Locality as a site of social interaction	252

End-Game: the city as a site of communication and the arrival of the post-modern city	253
The onset of new divisions, social polarisation and the development of an underclass	255
An environment of communication	257
The late-modern, or post-modern, city as a mobile site	258
Modernity: the desire to construct a home and the differing experiences of post-modernity	261
Southall	261
to be a woman in new york city	262
New left realism	262
Investigating Los Angeles: Mike Davis and the post-modern City of Quartz	266
12 CRIMINOLOGY AND THE CULTURE OF MODERNITY	273
Culture as a restraining medium: the case of Japan	277
Culture as criminogenic	281
Albert Cohen	281
Cloward and Ohlin	284
The criminal sub-culture or gang	286
The conflict sub-culture or gang	286
The retreatist sub-culture	287
Walter Miller	288
Culture and social structure: does working class culture, or a culture of poverty, determine social conditions, or social conditions determine culture?	291
Bridging concepts: from social structural to individual or psychological states	293
Culture and crime: an extreme example?	295
13 CULTURE AND CRIME IN THE POST-MODERN CONDITION	297
The challenge of culture under post-modernism: democraticism or incoherence?	297
Conceptualising modern identity	299
The post-modern condition is the contingency of the normal	302
Contingency and the sense of justice	306
The melange of the late or post-modern	308
The skills of post-modern living: or how can we live in the absence of 'real' meaning?	309
Location by consumption patterns	313
Desire, growth, materiality and the coherence of practical justice	315
Understanding the (non)reality of crime: the non-positivist sign	319
The cultural paradox of post-modernism: energy and exhaustion	319

14 LABELLING THEORY, AND THE WORK OF DAVID MATZA	321
Introduction	321
Labelling theory: from mechanical naturalism into interactional process	321
The understanding of social psychology espoused by Herbert Mead	322
David Matza: from hard to soft determinism	328
Drift theory	332
Direction One: the irony of labelling and the reproduction of delinquency by state intervention	334
Direction Two: the power of collective representation: from Matza to Foucault?	337
The importance of the sign: the construction of hyper-reality	338
Direction Three: positivism fights back asking for a reconciliation with process: seeing criminality as a thought process	341
Direction Four: Does the act of labelling invite irrational responses? The games of law, desire and death	343
The overuse of law: law's ability to create crime	346
Direction Five: the latent power of existentialism within criminology	348
 15 CRIME AND THE EXISTENTIALIST DILEMMA	 349
Combating the vertigo of freedom: the existentialist reconciliation in sincerity and authenticity	349
The optimistic ethos of criminological existentialism	351
The harsh end of criminological existentialism	352
Early modernity and the crime of passion	354
Tactic one: the beast within who can overtake us when we are weak or asleep	357
Tactic two: the psychopath	358
Recognising the existential sensuality of crime	358
The sensuality of stealing	360
Street Elites: Aristocrat verses rabble	364
Rape and sexual homicide	365
The dialectic of self-awareness and self-control	367
The events which constituted these offences were social actions embodying relations; actions mediated through culture and emotions	368
Moral transcendence	373
Symbolic displacement	378
Conclusion: the message of existentialism?	380
 16 MODERNITY, GENDER AND CRIME: FROM THE BIOLOGICAL PARADIGM INTO FEMINIST INTERPRETATIONS	 383
Do women exist?	383
Women in the construction of modernity	384
Boundary setting: modernity and the otherness of women	385

What has criminology said about all of this?	386
Statistical discrepancy in the commission of crime between men and women	387
Individuals found guilty or cautioned for indictable offences per 100,000 people in the population	387
Indictable offences (tried in Crown Court)	388
Summary offences (tried in magistrates' courts)	388
Understanding the official statistics and criminal involvement	388
Several writers have denied the truth of differential involvement in crime	389
Victim surveys and self-report tests support the official statistics	390
Has there been leniency or chivalry by officials within the Criminal Justice System in their dealings with women?	390
What type of crime do women commit? And should we expect their crime to increase?	394
Why have there been so few theories on crime which are gender specific?	395
Criminological explanations were not set out as 'arguments explaining why men commit more crime than women'	396
Biological and psychological explanations: a critique	398
The effect of aggression and biology?	399
Sex role socialisation	400
Is there an increase in female crime? Does the liberation of women necessitate that they become as criminal as men?	405
What is the empirical evidence in criminology?	407
The problematising of masculinity in post-modernism	409
Questioning the post-modernist turn	412
Can a criminological theory of rational conformity, which does not reduce femininity to passivity or over-control, be developed?	413
17 CONTEMPORARY SOCIAL STRATIFICATION AND THE DEVELOPMENT OF THE UNDERCLASS	417
The arrival of the underclass	417
The radical right's tradition of constitutional or cultural features aided by mistaken social policy as explaining the emergence of the underclass	419
The radical right's image of the future of civil society	425
The social democratic thesis of the underclass as a consequence of post-industrialisation	426
The class thesis that the underclass is partly a creation of a redistribution of wealth from the poor to the rich in the 1980s	433
The underclass and criminology	436
The underclass and post-modernism	436
Conclusion	442
Postscript: A note on the Los Angeles Riots of 1992	443
Visualising reality	448
The riot as an indicator of the post-modern future?	449

18 BUILDING CRIMINOLOGICAL THEORY IN POST-MODERNISM	451
Lyotard and the death of modern social theory	453
Does post-modernism imply the impossibility of constructing a general theory, or even of integrating different theories?	455
Eleven structures of criminological theory	458
If post-modernism comes out of modernity, then who are we? Where are we? How do we make sense of criminological 'reality'?	460
How can social arrangements appear just in post-modernism? How can social order be legitimate under the culture of contingency?	462
Social justice, positionality and the emotions of post-modernism	464
How can a form of social justice be constructed that copes with the culture of contingency?	466
Without a continuing narrative of modernity, Just Gaming becomes just gaming	466
Is post-modernism the collapse of any drive towards social individuality; are we mere modular components?	467
The ideal late-modern self fits a variety of late-modern games; our modular man possesses social capital: is criminality a function of social capital?	469
A final end-word? Beyond post-modernist doubts?	473
Index	509